Two Essential Minerals for Dairies Given

(By William F. Cyrus)
County Agent

Calcium and phosphorus are two essential minerals of concern to local dairymen and livestock feeders. Minerals that need to be supplied livestock in amounts greater than what are carried in good rations vary according to the kind of livestock and in the case of dairy cattle, the amount of production. Salt, sulphur, potassium, magnesium, iodine, iron and copper, sulphur, calcium and phosphorus are all needed in the animal body. Under average conditions a well balanced ration for any type of livestock will supply adequate amounts of all of these except sometimes calcium and phosphorus, according to a report from the Oregon Experiment station.

Practically all dairymen supply adequate salt in one way or another. Sulphur, potassium, and magnesium are contained in sufficient quantities in practically all feeds used in making up any proper ration, so that the feeding of these in mineral mixtures is unnecessary and useless expense. Iodine is sometimes desirable where trouble with goiter, "big neck" and some other troubles sometimes develop. J. R. Haag, of the Oregon station says in Station Bulletin 309, "The exact requirements for iodine are not known. The quantity required, however, is known to be very small. Iodine may be conveniently supplied in the form of iodized salt—the use of excessive quantities of iodine may be harmful; it is also a useless expense." In regard to iron and copper Mr. Haag says, "There is as yet no substantial evidence that well fed livestock in this section of the U. S. will benefit from the feeding of iron and copper salts."

Bone Meal Recommended

With this information in mind it then becomes apparent that the two minerals which should be of concern to the local livestock and dairy feeder are calcium and phosphorus. In the case of dairy cattle it is generally well known that calcium and phosphorus requirements of high producing cows are greater than is supplied in the ordinary ration. The quantity of either of these materials that needs to be supplied in the form of minerals will vary somewhat with the individual animal and particularly with the type of feed they are getting. How to supply these two minerals most economically is the question in the minds of most of our dairymen. Experimental work here in Oregon and elsewhere has adequately demonstrated the fact that the use of bone-meal will supply both the calcium and phosphorus needed and that this is an economical source of these two minerals. Two pounds of sterilized bone-meal per one hundred pounds of grain mixture is looked upon as an entirely adequate mineral supplement to a proper ration made up of legume hay, grain, succulence, and the usual protein supplements.

A gift of $25,000 was made by Alfred P. Sloan this month to be used in granting scholarships to city and state police officers and engineers, who will be enabled to study for one year in special departments at Northwestern and Harvard universities. Twenty awards will be made to men in the cities and states winning the various divisions of the National Safety council's traffic safety contest for 1937.
