Salary Raise For Teachers Is Proposed

A salary raise of Washington county's grade and high school teachers, along with others in the state, may be the result of a program announced at the Oregon State Teachers' association convention in Portland last week-end, it was declared here by O. B. Kraus, county school superintendent.

Plans of the state department of education, to be suggested to the state legislature when it convenes on January 9, would boost the minimum salary of state teachers from the present $618 base to about $1000 per year, it was reported by Rex Putnam, state superintendent of public instruction.

Delegates representing this county at the convention were Lester Mooberry, principal of the David Hill school; E. Britt Nedry, Tigard grade school principal; Esther Schrader, Beaverton grade teacher, and C. W. Loose, Tualatin educator, who substituted for J. P. McGlasson, principal of the Forest Grove union high school.

Also of interest to Washington county was a proposed teachers' retirement plan which would deduct a small per cent of teachers' salaries each month to establish a retirement fund, Mr. Kraus said. Tentative plans call for voluntary retirement at the age of 62 and compulsory retirement at 70.

Building Boom Predicted in 1939

Fir Grove dairy barn was under construction.

Plans for construction of a new Hillsboro grade school took definite form in September when a date was set for a special election to decide on a $120,000 bond to finance the project. The proposal gained wide support in succeeding weeks but was decisively rejected by voters on September 27.

Streets Coated

During the latter part of September, Hillsboro's streets were getting a coat of tar and sand. On September 21, fire completely destroyed the Buxton schoolhouse, woodshed and electric pump house. Plans for replacing the school were discussed immediately.

Contract for construction of an $8000 steel and concrete service station on the old "Opera House" site at Second and Washington was let in the second week of October and work was started immediately. Later that month another of Hillsboro's old landmarks was on its way "out" with announcement by S. W. Melhuish of plans for replacing the old building with a new tile structure to cost $5500. The old shop, subsequently, was moved onto a lot adjoining on the east and work started on the new building, still under construction and scheduled for completion around the last of February.

Haley Cannery

Addition of a new building and a new business to Hillsboro's industrial area was foreseen in November with early negotiations to encourage the Haley cannery to establish its plant in this city. Still indefinte, council plans at present are to donate a site on Fourth and Cedar for construction of the plant. On November 1, the council approved a drainage project which will install storm sewers to serve a large area in the east end of the city.

Armistice Day, November 11, saw a dream of Hillsboro grid fans come true with dedication of the new Hilhi grandstand. Definite action toward formation of the Wolf Creek highway and Sorrento water districts, both in the vicinity of Beaverton, was taken late in the year with the setting of dates for special elections. Both proposals were later approved by residents within the districts and laying of water mains is expected to get under way soon.

Home Building

A flurry of home-building and minor remodeling jobs descended on the city as the year neared its end.

December also saw the moving of an old one-story frame structure from the corner of First and Main to make way for a new service station. Many other homes were built in and near the city, but no listing is available.

From the standpoint of construction finance, the year was one of outstanding success. J. M. Person, general manager of the Tualatin Valley Federal Savings and Loan association, announced late in the year that more homes had been financed by his company during 1938 than during any year since 1928. Mr. Person's predictions for the coming year were ultra-optimistic.

On a national scale, Roger Babson last week forecast an extensive building boom in 1939.

with DIESEL POWER

Former horse farmer William A. Brinkert, Sherman County, Oregon, says: "A year's supply of fuel, oil, and grease to operate my 'Caterpillar' Diesel D2 Tractor on 1800 acres cost me $151.60. That's a cash saving of $648.40 over my former horse feed cost. I'm 'tickled pink' with my D2 and wouldn't go back to hazing 'bangtails' for anything."

Why not put your horse feed expense into your pocket by replacing now with "Caterpillar" Diesel power? Come in and let's talk it over.
