Aged Document Recalls First Oregon Troop

Names that echo events in the early history of Oregon, when life was perilous, have been recalled from a musty, yellowed document culled from a mass of unassorted papers stored for years in a nook in the basement of the court house at The Dalles.

It is the original muster roll of Company B of the first regiment of Oregon mounted volunteers, which was called into existence by proclamation of Governor Curry of the Territory of Oregon, October 11, 1855.

Displayed at Convention

The historic paper was discovered by Vaughn Stratford, field worker for the historical records survey of the works progress administration, who was going over the old documents as they were gathered by the janitor of the building. It was first officially brought to the attention of the public when it was displayed at the recent fifteenth anniversary celebration of Company H, 186th Regiment, Oregon National Guard, at The Dalles.

Company B of the first regiment of the Oregon mounted volunteers served from Oct. 20, 1855, to June 1, 1856 and included such men as Col. James Nesmith, its commander, noted Oregon jurist who also served Oregon as United States senator; Orlando Humason, captain, whose activities in the legislature resulted in creation of Wasco county; John T. Jeffries, first lieutenant, and James McAliff, second lieutenant, later prominent as sheriff of Walla Walla county.

Non-commissioned officers included Amos Underwood, fourth corporal, who inherited a young squaw from her Indian father as he was about to be hanged for participation in the famous Cascade massacres. He made her his wife and later founded the town of Underwood, Wash., on his land claim.

to the fire sector from the district warden's office.

By Sunday, the blaze had becoome so large and threatening that additional men were called into fire-fighting service and stationed at the CCC Camp Reeher, near Westimber, which was itself threatened by flames on Sunday night.

So hot was the blaze for a time that Southern Pacific trains carrying water cars and fire-fighters to Cochran were forced to turn back at the Weddeburg mill in the face of great danger to the lives of all aboard. By Monday, however, flames along the tracks were spent, allowing relief trains to get through to the Cochran sector once more.

Cars Tuesday were still traversing the county road between Camp Trask and Cochran, but burning embers alongside the road cautioned drivers that fire might flare up at any minute.

The constantly changing fire fronts are being carefully patrolled, according to Fire Warden Kyle, to prevent the blaze from spreading further west into the Salmonberry section, north into the Oregon-American Lumber company tract or south into Consolidated holdings. The 500-gallon state pumper is now stationed at the Reeher CCC camp to safe-guard the over-populated bunkhouses from destruction in case of another threat, Kyle said.
