Col. Liebe Wins Bronze Star

Lt. Col. Harold A. Liebe of Tacoma, Wash., son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Slade of Reedville, has been awarded the Bronze Star medal at the field artillery school at Fort Sill, Okla., to add to his collection of medals. He was cited "for exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding services in the southwest Pacific area from July 1, 1944, to June 20, 1945," in an order signed by Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

The action which brought the honor was the Leyte operation when his leadership was said to be instrumental in providing continuous close artillery support to the infantry. Colonel Liebe wears the Silver Star medal for gallantry in action at Davao, Mindanao, the Asiatic-Pacific theatre ribbon with battle stars, and the Philippine liberation, American defense, American theatre and Victory ribbons.

His permanent address is Lakeside club, Tacoma. Col. and Mrs. Liebe and their daughter, Carol Ann, 14, are now residing at 1509 Dearborn street, Lawton, Okla.

Veterans Given Service Credit

Veterans generally should realize the importance of their service-acquired skills in seeking upgrading either in school or in employment, and should be urged to "avail themselves of whatever credit may be granted them by their employers or the educational institutions of their choice."

This advice was received by Hugh E. Rosson, Oregon department of veterans' affairs director, in a recent letter from Major Gen. G. B. Erskine, retraining and reemployment administrator of the department of labor.

"The granting of credit to veterans for service-acquired training and experience is a matter which has not been fully exploited," Erskine says.

Rosson, commenting on Erskine's letter, points out that Oregon high schools automatically grant two units for completion of basic training to any veteran wishing to further his secondary education. Further, he says that most high schools in the state are familiar with the educational development tests of the American Council on Education, by which veterans can receive diplomas from their pre-war high schools if they successfully complete these exams.

Also, those veterans who did not previously attend Oregon high schools may, by passing these tests, be issued a certificate from Rex Putnam, superintendent of public instruction, Salem, showing that they have the equivalent of a high school education, and many now are doing just that. A case cited by Putnam is that of an ex-navy lieutenant-commander who had gone to school only as far as the third grade. But by virtue of self-education and navy training, he was able recently to pass the tests with a good score, and was issued a certificate of equivalency.

Rosson advises interested veterans to contact their local high school principals or write Putnam's office for information on educational up-grading.

In Erskine's letter it is urged that the use of these tests "be stimulated, because of the large number of jobs which require graduation from high school, or the equivalent."

For up-grading in jobs, he recommends greater use of the veteran's service records, "which show in varying degrees of completeness, what his training and experience have been."

Proper Care for Game Foods Told In OSC Bulletin

Methods of handling game and fish from the time the hunter or fisherman makes his kill until the food is prepared into palatable dishes through skillful cookery are explained in a new Oregon State college extension bulletin on "Game Foods."

The bulletin is written by Arthur S. Einarsen, head of the federal wildlife research unit at Oregon State college, in cooperation with the college, the state game commission and the U. S. fish and wildlife service.

Game foods are highly nutritious and provide an excellent supplementary food supply, but since emphasis in recent years has been on hunting and fishing as a pastime the game has not always been used thriftily. Einarsen points out. Pioneers obtained a large part of their meat supply by hunting and fishing, he adds, but since these activities have become largely recreations instead of necessities, the knowledge of cookery has dwindled.

Suggestions are made for handling and dressing big game, fish and fowl in the field, preservation, and preparation for frozen locker storage.

The bulletin includes a number of basic recipes for cooking big game, water fowl, upland game and fish. A chart also gives details on dressing, preparation for locker, cooking and seasoning for the principal species of game and fish found in Oregon. Copies of the publication, extension bulletin 657, are available at county extension offices or from the college.

Tests Used for Locating T. B.

School children in some communities in the United States are given tuberculin tests every year. These tests are an aid in the great nation-wide hunt for unknown cases of tuberculosis. The tests do not, by themselves, reveal the presence of the disease, but they indicate the need for further study of the patient and help in the search for the unrecognized case from which infection originated.

There are, it is estimated, at least 500,000 cases of tuberculosis in this country, more than half of which are unknown to the health authorities. Since tuberculosis is a communicable disease, these unknown cases constitute a serious public health threat. A person with active tuberculosis, unaware that he has the disease, is risking his own life and may be spreading the disease in the community.

In order to find these unknown cases, mass chest X-ray surveys are advocated by the Tuberculosis Control division of the U. S. Public Health service and by the National Tuberculosis association and its state and local affiliates. The X-ray is the easiest way to find pulmonary tuberculosis in its early stages when there are no outward symptoms.

While children of elementary school age seldom have pulmonary tuberculosis, and therefore X-ray examinations are not practical, if they have come in contact with the disease, the TB germs may be present in their bodies. The tuberculin test reveals the presence of these germs and provides a lead in tracking down the source of infection.

Tuberculin reacts positively only to the germs when they have entered the body. If the test is negative, that is an end of the matter. If it is positive, then an X-ray picture is taken to find out if the child has healthy lungs. If the X-ray shows that the lungs are not diseased, then members of his family and other persons with whom he may have come in close contact are urged to have chest X-rays. This procedure frequently leads to the discovery of hitherto unknown cases of tuberculosis.

Tuberculin tests are also used to help the doctor in diagnosing doubtful cases of tuberculosis. Sometimes an X-ray reveals suspicious-looking shadows on the lungs, which may be caused by tumberculosis or may be due to several other causes. The test is then given and, if it is negative, the doctor knows his patient has not tuberculosis.

Tuberculin was discovered by Robert Koch, who proved that tuberculosis was caused by the tubercle bacillus. Koch conducted a series of experiments in the hope of finding a cure for the disease or a drug that would create immunity to it. He was unsuccessful in finding such a drug, but he did discover tuberculin, which has been a valuable aid in the search for unknown cases of tuberculosis.

Appendicitis will be discussed in the next article.—This article is presented by the Washington County Public Health association.

Bakeries Complying On Bread Curtailment

Hillsboro Bakery and Perfection Bakery announced this week that they are complying with the government's curtailed bread production order.

Last Friday, the United States department of agriculture ordered a 25 per cent reduction in the use of flour and in bread production effective Monday. The cut was ordered as part of a world-wide effort to beat off the worst famine threat in nearly 400 years. Its goal is to save another 25 million bushels of wheat for export.

Big Wheat Crop Looms As Stored Supplies Shrink

Another great national wheat crop this year is indicated by current USDA acreage and production data, says L. R. Breithaupt, OSC extension agricultural economist, in a weekly review of farm market, price and outlook information. The preliminary figure on total wheat acreage is three per cent greater for the whole country than last year.

With the output of winter wheat already forecast at slightly more than last year, spring wheat yields will determine whether a new wheat production record will be made in 1946. Growers have indicated intentions to increase the national spring wheat acreage 1.6 per cent. Planting is nearly finished.

Even should the 1946 wheat crop be as large or larger than the record breaking crop of 1945, total supplies for the 1946-47 marketing year will surely be smaller. Owing principally to heavy exports during 1945-46, the carryover next July 1 probably will be substantially smaller. The present situation indicates that the total supply may be from 100 million to 200 million bushels less. The supply should be ample, however, as it is not expected that United States overseas shipments will be nearly as great in 1946-47.

Meanwhile great public interest centers on wheat in the Pacific Northwest currently owing to conflicting demands for the stocks on hand in this area. Owing to the scarcity of other concentrate feeds, much wheat is regularly used for feeding poultry and grain-eating livestock in the Pacific states.

The production of the feed grains barley, oats and corn, in the four Pacific states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and California, in 1945 was less than two per cent of the national production of these crops. Ten per cent of the national human population is in the four Pacific states, however. Thus, much wheat must be fed if enough meat, milk, eggs and poultry are to be produced in this area to supply the people with such foods.

Farmers Urged to Order Limestone

Washington coutny farmers who wish to obtain limestone as part of their AAA practice program are urged to place their orders with the county AAA office in Hillsboro at once, says John W. Kamna, county chairman.

The lime plants are receiving many orders and indications are that they will soon be booked up for the entire season.

Lime payment in Washington county is approximately $5 per ton up to the limit of $2 per acre of cropland in the farm. Because of the heavy requests for lime, farmers may find that delivery may have to be accepted at various times throughout the year. Lime may be purchased in bulk or sacked. Limited spreading facilities are available.
