Test for Oregon Spuds Set in South

A record number of 236 individual lots of potato seed from certified seed fields in 12 Oregon counties will be taken to California the last week in November for planting in the Oceanside disease tests plots, reports J. R. McCambridge, extension seed certification specialist at O.S.C.

The Oregon samples this year, representing 13 varieties and weighing approximately 15 tons, will require 6½ acres for planting, says McCambridge. Nine western states and one or more Canadian provinces will join in the Oceanside testing program.

The samples will first be assembled at Klamath Falls where they will be treated with gas to break their dormancy under the supervision of D. E. Bullis, associate agricultural chemist of the experiment station.

Planting will take place the week of November 24, in time for the growth to reach a "reading stage" by about February 1 when growers and buyers can have the results on percentage of disease.

Experience with the California tests has shown their value in the past three years, McCambridge explains. Frequently virus diseases that are masked in the area of production will show up at Oceanside. Thus lots carrying too much disease for good seed can be eliminated in advance of planting time in the north.

No foundation seed, the highest grade under certification, will be tagged finally until the test results are known. Any advance sales will be under a blue tag marked "Foundation, subject to test plot."

Vets Advised About Dental Care Rules

Dolph Stuart, county service officer, this week issued a warning to veterans having dental work done that approval is needed from the veterans' administration before the dentist can be re-imbursed.

Stuart also said he has received information about public lands in Alaska which are available to vets for homesteading. He said the limit per man is 160 acres. The veteran's war-time record applies toward his homestead time, Stuart said.
