Discuss death, dying at Astoria Public Library Oregon Humanities to lead conversation on difficult subjects

ASTORIA — Death is part of the human experience; all of us have experienced loss and all of us will die one day. Yet conversations about death and dying are difficult and often avoided even with close family members and friends.

The public is invited to participate in a free community conversation about death and dying at 6 p.m. Friday, Oct. 9 at Astoria Public Library, located at 450 10th St.

Talking About Dying is a one-time, 90-minute community discussion that provides Oregonians with an opportunity to reflect on what stories and influences have shaped their thinking about death and dying and to hear different perspectives and ideas from fellow community members.

Participants will explore essential questions: "What do we think about when we think of dying?" For the people who have moved closer to death, "What seemed to work well for them and the people close to them? What seemed difficult?" And, when we think about our own dying, "What do we want most?"

Participants will come away from this conversation with a strengthened sense of community support and collective engagement around these questions, as well as a resource list with tools and information to help them consider how to shape a meaningful approach to death and dying.

Talking about Dying is a statewide initiative by Oregon Humanities, created in partnership with Cambia Health Foundation, to bring 30 conversations about death and dying to communities across the state from September through November.

Trained professionals working in the fields of chaplaincy, counseling, gerontology, facilitation and hospice care will facilitate these conversations.

For more information about this community discussion, contact Astoria Public Library at 503-325-7323, or email comments@astorialibrary.org
