Gas Company Plans Additions In Tualatin Area

Substantial additions to gas distribution facilities serving the Tualatin valley are included in Portland Gas & Coke company's $1,244,000 construction budget for 1947, according to Fred J. Earke, Hillsboro district manager.

Nine miles of six-inch main are scheduled to be added between Hillsboro and Beaverton to provide greater transmission capacity to the area, and a 500-horsepower compressor unit is slated to be added at the company's new booster station near Cedar Mill.

Storage for liquified petroleum gas, used to gain peak capacity during cold weather, will also be increased at the Cedar Mill station, which pumps gas into the Hillsboro line through a connection at Beaverton.

Gas production capacity at the company's plant near Lambton will be increased by the construction of a large new generator and by the conversion of existing generators to a new type of automatic operation.

To provide funds for the big construction program, the company has requested Securities and Exchange commission approval of a $2,500,000 loan from three Portland banks.

Immediate expansion of the company's facilities is essential if it is to be in a position to meet anticipated record peak demands next winter, the SEC was told.

Anderson Takes Survey Position

Richard J. Anderson, resident geologist of the Alcoa Mining company, which has had its headquarters in Hillsboro for about two years, is leaving the firm the middle of the month to serve as managing engineer of the raw materials survey to be conducted in this area, it was announced Saturday. The survey has been incorporated as a non-profit organization supported by chambers of commerce, banks, public utilities, steamship and railroad lines and port authorities of Oregon and southern Washington.

Purpose of the survey is to collect basic factual engineering and economic data on sources of raw materials needed by present and potential industries of this area.

Anderson obtained his degree in geology at Columbia university in 1938 and did additional graduate work at the University of Minnesota. He was acting state geologist in Arkansas before joining Alcoa. Permanent chairman of the operating committee is Gen. Thomas M. Robbins, retired, formerly deputy chief of army engineers in Washington, D. C., now engaged in private consulting practice in Portland. Headquarters of the survey will be in the Woodlack building. Anderson and his family will continue to live in Hillsboro at present and he plans to carry on as camping and activities chairman of the local Boy Scout district.

GRANGERS SHAPE THE PATTERN of OREGON'S DEVELOPMENT

Grange achievements that have made Oregon a better state in which to live:

- ✓ R. F. D. Routes
- ✓ Direct Election of Senators
- ✓ Cooperative Marketing
- ✓ Better Roads
- ✓ Improvements in Education
- ✓ Graduated Income Tax
- ✓ Improved Marketing
- ✓ Low-Cost Light and Power

OREGON FARMERS make a sizeable contribution every year to the nation's breadbasket. And the "staff of life" is important to Grangers.

The contribution of wheat farmers to Oregon business is estimated by the U.S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics at $29,453,000 for the last reported year—farm wealth that filters into trade channels to build the economically sound Oregon always advocated by the Grange.

Grange strength in Oregon surges from 30,000 farmers who look ahead and think ahead. Their efforts to improve living conditions of the state's farmers also shape the pattern of Oregon's development—for what helps the farmers helps every Oregonian.
