Lessard Uses New Method of Prune Process

E. H. Lessard, former Oreneo resident, has been making news lately with his first commercial application of a revolutionary new packaging procedure designed to market prunes with a high moisture content, at his processing plant in Santa Rosa, Calif.

A comparative newcomer to the prune industry, Lessard is using a method originated after three years of study by University of California food technologists in an effort to provide new outlets for the state's vast prune production.

It "short cuts" the usual method of handling the prune crop, and makes possible marketing of soft, pliable, tender, but thoroughly processed fruit as a confection to be "eaten out of hand," or prepared for the table in far less cooking time, Mr. Lessard says.

A steam blanching process and introduction of a few drops of propylene oxide, a tasteless, odorless fumigant in each airtight plio-film plastic bag of the processed fruit is the secret of the "keeping qualities."

The Lessard plant is processing the crop from his own 40-acre holding near Santa Rosa. He is marketing his product independently under the trade name of "Santa Rosa Sweet Prunes."

SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK

News Highlights Of the Week

Charges Fifth Column Web

Great Britain charged before the United Nations Wednesday that Communist fifth columns controlled by Moscow were trying throughout the world to sabotage economic recovery and create political chaos. Lashing back at Vishinsky's professions of Soviet readiness to negotiate for peace and stability, Sir Hartley Shawcross said that underground sabotage and subversive propaganda carried out under the direction of Moscow were rife in the world.

Western Powers Remain Firm

Desperate attempts by "neutral" nations in the United Nations security council to mediate the Berlin crisis apparently were stalled Monday. Spokesmen for the United States, Britain and France declared that the western powers are standing firm on their demand that the Soviet blockade be lifted.

Disarmament Impossible

Warren Austin, U. S. delegate to United Nations, declared in Paris Tuesday, disarmament is impossible in a world where the Soviet battle cry is "wreck and destroy."

Dewey Affirms U. S. Unity

Governor Thomas E. Dewey told the world Sunday that the American people "vigorously" support the efforts of the United States delegation at Paris for prompt lifting of the Berlin blockade. Although he did not voice any public criticism of the proposal by which President Truman would send Chief Justice Vinson to Moscow, it was learned that Dewey regarded Mr. Truman's project as a desperate blunder.

"Winterize" Air Lift

U. S. air force announced plans Tuesday to "winterize" the Berlin air lift. Several hundred reserve officers will be given special training and can revert to inactive duty next spring.
