Baritone Provides Musical Treat for Concert-Goers

By Ronald M. Clark
Hilhi Vocal Music Director

Washington county community concert goers were treated to a fine concert by an outstanding young American baritone in the person of John Tyers, last Wednesday night at the Hilhi auditorium.

It is seldom that a young singer of the concert stage is blessed with so many attributes necessary to the success of a singer as were exhibited by Mr. Tyers. He was particularly adept at being able to carry the interest of the audience from beginning to the end of his varied concert.

His engaging stage personality, ability to interpret and to capture the mood of the song were qualities which aid him in becoming a favorite with audiences wherever he may sing. He left the impression with his audience that his enthusiasm for his singing and his desire to please were not something to put on before the concert and remove after using, but instead were entirely genuine.

His program was well selected and should have pleased the musical tastes of all. Outstanding numbers were his interpretation of Mozart's "Now Your Days of Philandering Are O'er," Holmes' "To the Country," which was a descriptive return of a soldier to find his sweetheart had married another, and Tschaikovsky's "None But the Lonely Heart."

He was generous with his encores which were made up of such favorites as "Sylvia," "The Toreador's Song," "Oh What a Beautiful Mornin'" and others equally pleasing. In his desire to please, Mr. Tyers sang the English translation of several songs when it would have been to his advantage vocally to have sung the original text. His diction was outstanding.

Radio has given the American public a chance to hear great music by great artists but it never will be able to capture the personal element of live artists appearing before audiences. Artists react and incidentally, perform considerably better before audiences than when they have to stand before a cold and impersonal radio microphone. The concert by Mr. Tyers was a clear demonstration of this latter fact.

The concert was the second in a series of four for the local association. The third will be on Monday, February 21, when Miss Patricia Travers, violinist, will appear.
