OF ANOTHER AGE.

Gradually Supplanted by a Better Article Certain Old Times are Done Away.

In the general reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are only relics now. More perfect machinery has superseded them.

Years ago what is styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that has changed. Science and study have gone deeper into the secrets of medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies thus far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters are slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be careful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. Price 25 cents.

FRIDAY.....JANUARY 2, 1885

PERILOUS ADVENTURE.

Thomasville (Ga.), November 12.—The death of Thomas Stewart, in Berrien county, recalls the story of a strange and checkered career. It was in 1845, when, as a youth he first attracted attention. He was not remarkable for anything except scrawniness, being small of stature, lean and clay-bank color, the result perhaps, of private meals off of the chimney clay. But as the time sped by he became a hero in that then wild country; at least he was a hero in one sense. The family with whom he lived resided not far from the Alapaha swamp. Once he and another boy were sent to the swamp to feed a sow. When within a short distance of it a large tiger sprang out of the bushes and brought Stewart to the ground. He fell on his face, and then the tiger seemed to be in no hurry to kill him. Indeed, the brute was engaged just then in watching the other boy fleeing in the direction of the house. Being satisfied as to the direction the other boy took, the tiger then took Stewart's head in its mouth and closed on it, but its teeth slipped over instead of penetrating the skull. It bit the boy's skull several times with the same result, and the boy, with a presence of mind wonderful in one so young, did not once flinch while the beast was tearing huge furrows through his scalp. The tiger, after holding its nose near the boy's face an instant, as if listening if he was breathing, seemed satisfied that he was dead, and hastily covering him up with pine straw ran hurriedly after the other boy. As soon as the tiger was out of sight Stewart sprang to his feet, and taking a wide circuit, ran with all the speed he could command, and finally reached the house in safety. The other boy reached the house some time before the tiger came in sight of it, and the brute, seeing that he was too late, hurried back to his first prey.

If Stewart had moved while the tiger was biting his skull, or if he had breathed while the beast was listening with his nose close to his face, he would have been torn into fragments; but the boy, having heard of many of the peculiarities of this ferocious beast was prepared to profit by the knowledge.

As soon as the boys told of their wonderful escape, three neighbors, all resolute men, determined to hunt down and kill the beast. They had one musket and two hunting-knives. Taking a favorite deer-hound, they proceeded to the swamp. When near it they saw the dog take the trail of the tiger and enter the bushes. In a few minutes they heard a howl, and then all was quiet. They knew that the dog had been killed. Halting, they made a solemn compact to stand by each other to the last. Then they entered the swamp, the man with the musket in front and the others close behind, in Indian file, the front man with his musket ready and the other two with their knives drawn. They had not proceeded more than fifty yards in the swamp when the front man was felled to the ground. The tiger seemed to drop out of the clouds upon him. He fell on his back, and the beast tried to seize his throat with his mouth, but he threw up his arm and that member was seized instead. In a moment the second man seized the musket, and placing the muzzle close to the tiger's side fired the load of bukshot through its body. It still held its hold. Clubbing the gun, he dealt the animal three powerful blows on the head, and still it did not release its victem. The third man then threw himself upon the tiger and cut its throat. Then it loosened its grip and expired on top of its victem. The animal measured twelve feet from the end of his nose to the tip of his tail.

A few years after the above occurrence, Stewart while feeding a cane-mill, had one of his hands caught and drawn in between the rollers and so badly mashed that the hand and a portion of the arm withered. Later on as he was in the field at work, when a thunderstorm came up and he was struck by lighning, and left for dead. He came to, however, and was all right in a few days. By this time he was old enough to take unto himself a wife but the parents of his girl did not favor the alliance, so they decided on an elopement. In those days even, a hero could get married without shoes, so he started for his future wife, succeeded in getting her from the house, and the happy pair were on their way to the parson's when Stewart was bitten on the foot by a moccasin, a dangerous reptile. Even that did not stop him. They proceeded to the parson's and were united in wedlock. Stewart did not die from the snake-bite. History does not say whether the snake died.

Next we hear of Stewart, he was being tried for his life for the murder of a man named Wheeler. The evidence was all against Stewart and everybody thought he would hang. He was defended by the now venerable Judge Hansell of Thomasville, then a young lawyer just "starting out." So able was the defense, as pathetically did the young lawyer dwell upon the many hair-breadth escapes of the prisoner, who seemingly had been perserved through them all through providential intervention, that the jury brought in such a verdict as sent him to the Penitentiary for six years. While in the Penitentiary he learned the painter's trade, and after satisfying the sentence of the law returned home.

A FOX STEALS A BABY.

Considerable excitement has been caused lately at Katase by the doings of a fox. A young, well-to-do farmer and his wife, who have a child two months old, are occupying a small wooden structure during the rebuilding of their former premises. On Sept. 13 the wife, as usual, went to sleep with the little one, but, waking during the night, was surprised to find it had left her side. She at once called her husband, when it was discovered that one of the frail wooden doors had been broken open. The supposition naturally followed that some one had entered and stolen the infant, consequently the father started with the intention of arousing the neighbors. He had, however, only just stepped outside, when he perceived a large fox run from under the veranda of the house opposite. Suspecting that Reynard was the culprit, lights were procured and a search made, which, to the delight of the parents, resulted in the discovery of the baby, who, strange to say, had received no injury beyond a few scratches.

HISTORICAL.

Since 1823, cholera has visited Eurcpean Russia three times and killed 1,600,000.

Even as late as the time of Henry VIII., all foreign artificers were prohibited from working in England.

Manulius, the Roman, is said to have put his own son, though victorious, to death for disobeying orders; and Cassius Brutus killed a son who had negotiated with the enemy.

Abraham paid 400 shekels of silver ($200) for a piece of land for a burial place. In Solomon's time it is mentioned the price of a chariot from Egypt was 600 shekels ($250). The price of a horse was 150 shekels (about $72.)

Boar hunting in former times was a favorite recreation. In the Middle Ages the destruction of a wild boar ranked among the deeds of chivalry, and won for a warrior almost as much renown as slaying an enemy in the open field.

The Rev. Mr. Burchard now considers himself "the instrument selected by Divine Providence to cause Cleveland's election." And John Kelly winks his dexter eye.

An observer of wasps finds that they are most active from about 9:30 to 11 a. m., and 2 to 5 p. m.
