THE OREGON SENTINEL

[Written for the Sentinel.]

Last Words of D. Chalmbers.

"Dear Harry," moaned a soldier,
"Come close to my side;
I feel that I am stricken—
Fast ebbs the crimson tide.

"It seems to me so sudden,
That death should come so soon
To one so young and full of life,
Not nearly twenty-one.

"I think through this morning
I would be my last on earth,
When round round the campfires,
So full of joy and mirth.

"God's ways are not our ways,'
So I will not repine;
He worketh mysteriously
His wonders to design.'

"You'll write and tell my mother
To grieve not for her son—
Our country claims the sacrifice,
Among them I'm the one.

"Tell her I did not falter,
Nor cowardly shrink back—
This day hid me forward,
And never turned the track.

"And there's another, Harry,
Dear Kate, you know I mean;
When thoughts of her steal o'er me,
The pangs of death are keen.

"When I reach that land of rest,
Which place I'm going to,
If there I can be permitted,
My first care I'll renew.

"Come, Harry, to me closer,
My life is ebbing fast
I hope you will stay with me,
Dear comrade, to the last.

"We've marched and camped together,
In sunshine, storm and rain;
We've shared the joys and woes
Of many a campaign.

"How cruelly thick are groaning!
By the are parched and dry;
I feel so strangely happy—
My faithful friend, good-bye."

Lines by Neicel.

Life pills on with unceasing pace,
Down the tide of Time it runs its race;
Like a mountain stream rushing to the plain,
Nor returns to tide its course again;
Do what we will, it makes no delay—
Neither stops to rest for night or day;
On, on it goes with restless tide,
Till the mighty deep its waters hide.

And thus it is with mortal man,
(Whose pilgrimage here is but a span)
From youth to age, with steady flow,
The tide of life must onward go,
And as the stream runs to the sea,
Life ends its course in vast Eternity.

United States District Court in New Orleans.

A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from New Orleans, August 5th, gives the following version of General Buck's late appearance before that Court:

It will be remembered that a short time since a number of ex-rebel lawyers made application to be admitted to practice in the United States District Court held in this city. Over which the Hon. Judge Durell presides with marked dignity and ability. The application was made in the form of a motion, and was opposed by Major General N. P. Banks, who a few days previous, on motion of Sullivan, was admitted to practice in the above Court for the special purpose of defending the constitutionality of the Act of Congress, which requires that what is commonly known as the "test oath" shall be taken by all applicants to practice in any United States Court.

If General Banks had not come forward to oppose the motion which was based on the supposed unconstitutionality of the Act referred to, there would not have been a single voice raised in opposition to the admittance of those rebels, a majority of whom still pride themselves on their connection with the rebel army.

The following notice is referred to the matter appeared in the Picayune:

The subject of the "test oath" was again brought before his honor Judge Durell by Mott, who stated that he was not present on Tuesday last, and did not consequently hear the remarks of the Court, but that he understood that his honor, in consideration of the importance of the subject, did not propose to hastily resolve a decision; and further, he understood that the Court had suggested that it would be the wisest course for one of the parties affected to make anect application for admission to the Supreme Court, where final decision would be arrived at immediately. Mott desired of the Court that these remarks, if correctly understood, be made part of the minutes of the Court inasmuch as he had determined to adopt the admission at the bar of the Supreme Court in December next, which decision would be binding upon all the inferior Courts of the United States.

In granting the request of the learned counsel, Judge Durell made some remarks from which we inferred that he believed in the constitutionality of the test oath; we obtained this notion from the complimentary allusion he made to General Banks. He said that the gentleman who argued on the part of the United States in favor of the constitutionality of the law had, perhaps, not given many years of his life to the study of what is termed, par excellence, "the books," yet, with one day's preparation, by mere strength of mind, he had fallen into the same course of reasoning used by Judge Taney in the Benjamin Watkins Leigh case, of Virginia, and by Chief Justice Collins in the Dorsey case, of Alabama; and that he was strongly inclined to believe the argument was based upon sound law, and that if the gentleman who had so ably sustained himself should become a permanent member of the bar of New Orleans, he would be an honor to the profession.
