Melons and Shotgun at Goldendale.

On Friday night of last week Joseph Linder, a farmer residing about a mile and a half from Goldendale, W. T., discovered two young men in his watermelon patch, and forthwith procured his shot gun and proceeded to take summary vengeance upon the marauders. Approaching them within a close distance, he discharged his gun at them, wounding one—Lincoln Smith—in the abdomen, and the other—William Shuster—in the shoulder. He immediately proceeded to the county seat and surrendered himself to the authorities. At one time it was thought that young Smith was fatally injured, but late accounts say both the young men are recovering and are able to be on the streets. It is perhaps very annoying for one who labors to make the soil productive to be robbed of the fruits of his industry; but in the lexicon of boyhood there is no such crime as larceny of watermelons, and it has usually been considered perfectly right for boys to help themselves wherever ripe melons could be found. A plaintive and pathetic story is told of this Klickitat rancher, how at early sun, at noonday, and on moonlight evenings he would visit this melon patch and watch their progress to maturity; how that he had a darling daughter, who had never tasted a watermelon, and whose budding hopes and girlish anticipations rested upon this green spot of earth upon her father's farm, and whose mouth constantly watered for the taste of a lucious melon; and how, times without number, as they would become ripe they would suddenly disappear, and all carefully constructed air-castles would crumble into dust. We haven't heard whether any poems were written upon this melon patch; perhaps not. At any rate the story goes, the old man's soul was so "harrowed up" with these disappointments, that he resorted to desperate means, with the result stated. We are glad to know that the boys were not fatally injured, and hope the next ones who are tempted to help themselves to "such truck" will try and be careful not to place themselves within range of a shot gun.

FREAK OF NATURE.—A singular freak of nature is shown in the case of Mrs. Polly George, a lady well known to many citizens, who lives two miles from Milburn, in this county. Mrs. G. is 76 years old, the mother and the grandmother of a large family in this county. During her life she has cut and shed her teeth twice and now has commenced to cut her third set, having cut four teeth within the past month—two above and two below.—She also a little over a year ago, shed her hair, which was white with age, and it is now replaced by a suit of black hair, with an occasional silver thread only.—"Tacoma News."

A rich young man was courting a poor young girl, but he was slow in bringing matters to a crisis.

So one day she complained of the hardships of being poor.

"Poor!" he exclaimed gallantly. "A young lady with your wealth of mind and grace of person poor! Why, such charms as you possess are worth a mint of money."

"Well, I wish I had the mint and somebody had the charms," she said, and the crisis came.

A visitor to John McCullough in the asylum says that his likeness to his "Virginius," in the mad scene is startling and pitiful. He imagines he is again acting the part of the deranged Roman. This is shown by his assumption of the poses which he employed on the stage and on his reproduction of the gait, facial expression, and even snatches of the language of the familiar prison scene.

A dispatch from Talladega, Ala., says the three children of J. H. McGowan saw him kill and dress a pig for a barbecue last Friday, and the next day the two elder children killed the youngest, and were in the act of dressing the body when their mother discovered them.

The publication of the New York "Star" will be resumed Monday. The editor in chief and proprietor is United States District Attorney Dorsheimer. The managing editor will be T. M. Cook, formerly of the "Sun" and later of the San Francisco "Alta California."

Murder at Newport.

On last Wednesday the body of an Indian woman, Emma Cushman, was found in the bushes above Newport on Yaquina bay. The hands being tied together and three wounds in the throat indicated an unmistakable murder. The woman had been employed as a washerwoman about Newport, and when last seen on the previous Sunday was at the Indian camp between Newport and Olson's, and from there followed two white men up the hill. The next found was the dead body, as above stated.

Warrants were issued for N. J. Kirke, John B. Lee, and the deputy sheriff came over to Brownsville and arrested Mr. Kirke. It seems the only evidence against him was the word of an old squaw and the presence near the dead body of an empty bottle that a Newport saloon keeper recognized as one he had sold to Mr. Kirke.

Mr. Blackburn was notified to go over and conduct the defense, and Mr. Riley Kirke, father of the accused, who was in Portland, also telegraphed Mr. Blackburn, and came up, and together they started for the bay on Tuesday. But they were met at Corvallis with a telegram stating the discharged; there being no evidence against him; he very easily proved where he was at the time the murder was committed, and thus established an alibi. The report appearing in the "Oregonian" of the arrest of a young man at Sweet Home on this same charge was not true, as no such arrest was made or suspicion entertained.

The belief seems to prevail that the murder was the work of the Indians themselves, and that the aforesaid elderly squaw committed the deed for the money the woman had; or that it was done by the half-breed, Cushman, who claimed to be the woman's husband. Both the parties bear suspicious characters.

A simple process of preserving fruit without the use of cans is now discussed by the farmers at the agricultural fairs and quietly considered by the canners in the intervals between the receipt of successive orders for Eastern shipments. The whole process of keeping fruit in bowls and other open top vessels is comprised in a simple covering of the vessel with ungiazed cotton, such as is purchased in the stores rolled in blue paper. The following are the directions. Use crocks, stone butter jars, or any other convenient dishes. Prepare and cook the fruit precisely as for canning in glass jars; fill your dishes with the fruit while it is yet hot, and immediately cover with the cotton batting securely tied on. Remember that all putrefaction is caused by the invisible creatures in the air. Cooking the fruit expels all these, and as they can not pass through cotton batting the fruit thus protected will keep for an indefinite period. It is said that berries, cherries, plums and many other kinds of fruit have been kept in this way for several years.

Hog raising is one of the most ready means of money making known to the western farmers. Even when the supply is abundant and prices low a margin of profit is found in well-kept stock. Such animals are always salable. They are comparatively free from disease, and usually bring quick returns, in cash, for the amounts invested. Moreover, every properly managed and well-fed hog that leaves the farm leaves in all the better condition for growing rich pastures and heavy crops of grain, than had he not been reared and fed upon the farm. Good management in hog-raising, as in the handling of all other farm animals, brings with the selection of good breeding stock. A good thoroughbred Berkshire boar will greatly improve any herd of common hogs. Almost any farmer can afford to buy such a boar at the prices now asked. In fact, we do not see how any farmer who raises hogs can afford not to buy.

The Portland "Oregonian," referring to the proposed completion of the California and Oregon road, says if it is finished "much of the trade of this country which now comes to Portland would go south as formerly to San Francisco. The effect of a through line would be to make San Francisco a rival of Portland for the trade of Portland's own field."

The Mexican pulpit and press have united in a war upon Mormonism, and they are determined that polygamy shall not get a footing in that country.

Cholera.

What should be done.—The "Record Union" prints a timely editorial on Cholera, and what should be done to prevent its ravages on this coast. We clip a part and publish it below. It says:

The cholera is on both sides of us. It has killed in Spain this summer nearly 100,000 people. Such a mortality from the disease has never before been known. Cholera has appeared in Japan. It was brought to Nagasaki by commerce, and probably from Spain. It therefore had a longer route to travel than that between San Francisco and Japan. Over the latter route there is more frequent communication than over the former. Under these circumstances, with the liability of the disease being brought to Mexico also by Spanish ships, Cal., has reason to be alarmed. There remains yet some four months in which cholera will be favored here by climatic conditions. The germs of the disease, it is settled, are transmissible on the longest sea voyage routes, and are carried clothing, ships' stores and general merchandise. They are even carried and disseminated by those who are not themselves attacked. In view of these facts, there should be at once made an official declaration against Japanese shipping points as infected ports and a rigid quarantine of all vessels arriving from there should be enforced. This should be supplemented by such fumigation of the clothing of passengers, merchandise and ships' stores, as will kill any lurking germs. But even these precautions are but make-shifts. The right thing to do is what will not be done, to close our ports utterly to ships from infected ports. Other nations have done so before now. After due notice there is no inhumanity in it.

At a meeting of the Northwestern Society of Beekeepers, the statistician of the society presented several statements of widespread interest, among which occurred the following:

The United States and Canada produce the bulk of honey consumed in the world and our apiarists are the most skilled and successful. We have a total of 3,000,000 colonies, which yield annually 120,000,000 pounds of honey. The comparative showing of all Europe is less than one tenth of this amount. In America honey is plentiful and cheap; in Europe it is scarce and costly. There are few localities in Europe where the bee prospers. Europe imports honey largely from our eastern states, while California supplies Australia. France depends upon Switzerland for honey supply. At the London agricultural fair was recently displayed American honey in the comb, which was awarded the prize over all the European exhibits.

A Washington dispatch of the 17th has the following concerning a recent decision of Judge Deady: The general land office has received information that Judge Deady, of the Oregon Circuit Court, has decided that preemption entries can only be canceled by proceedings in the courts. It has been the practice of the land office to cancel preemption entries upon sufficient proof of non compliance of the law, or want of good faith on the part of the preemptor. Acting Commissioner Walker has officially informed his informant that the practice and views of the law followed and entertained in the general land office will not be changed before the Supreme court of the United States shall have had an opportunity of passing upon the points raised by Judge Deady.

A lady entered our office the other day in search of postage stamps, and was told that we were out of them. She asked when we would have some ready, and was told that we should get some the first time we went to the postoffice. "Why," said she, incoently, "I supposed that you printed them here, and that the postoffice got them of you."

GOING TO MEASURE TIMBER.—Judge Hoffman has ordered the U. S. Marshal to procure the upright piece of wood, with a standard, for the purpose of measuring the hight of Chinamen who appear in court, in whose case there is any doubt of their being of the same hight as mentioned in the certificates held by them.
