☞ Senator Douglas reached Chicago last week, and it was arranged that a meeting should be held on Saturday evening, at which the Senator would address his fellow-citizens on the merits of the Nebraska act, and, also, perhaps, refer to the prominent part he sustained in connection with that measure. During the forenoon of Saturday there were exhibited decided demonstrations of opposition to the proposed meeting, and it was evident that attempts would be made to interrupt its proceedings. The meeting was held in the open air, and a vast concourse attended; but as soon as Douglas attempted to speak, a terrific din was raised; he was forced to stop, and finally abandoned the attempt. The mob succeeded in breaking up the meeting, but committed no other violence.
