Oswald R. Ball, the genial and hustling representative of the American Type Founders' Co., of Portland, was interviewing the Roseburg printers Saturand Sunday while making a tour of Southern Oregon in the interests of his company. It is always a pleasure to receive a visit from Mr. Ball as he invariably has a word of encouragement and good cheer for the craft, and some suggestions by which the newspaper man may profit. The present management of the Portland branch of the American Type Founders company is justly popular with the Oregon newspaper men and printers.

Prof. Geo. Bacon was transacting business in Roseburg Saturday, and favored this office with a pleasant call. The professor is conducting a very successful term of school at Looking Glass and we learn that the patrons of the school were justly indignant over a slur or sharp criticism of one number on the recent school entertainment program given out there, which appeared in the Plaindealer of recent date and which was contributed by a Looking Glass correspondent. The recitation in question was a humorous selection and there was nothing about it of an offensive nature, unless to someone eager to cast reflections on the school. We must insist that correspondents refrain from personalties and like criticisms.

DIED

SUMMERS.—Tuesday, Jan. 6th, 1903, on Mosby Creek, H. T. Summers, of Riddles, Or., aged 35 years.

Mr. Summers was the young man who was fatally injured in the logging camp on Mosby creek, last week by the accidental breaking of a singletree. He was assisting in moving some logs when the accident happened and the broken singletree flew back, striking him across the abdomen. His injuries were internal and after lingering a week in great pain succumbed.

The body of the unfortunate young man was brought to town Wednesday, where a casket was provided, and was shipped to his home in Riddles on the afternoon train.—Cottage Grove Leader.

Want to Sell Hay.

Farmers who have been holding large quantities of hay, believing that the winter would be severe, and that their stock would require much feeding, are now looking for a market for their hay. They believe that any severe weather that may come between now and spring is not likely to be of long duration, and that they have more feed than they will have occasion to use.—Eugene Guard.
