Kate Claxton played "Two Orphans," one of her greatest successes, to a large and fashionable audience at the Roseburg Theatre on Friday night. The play is an excellent portrayal of the social and political conditions existing in France just prior to the French revolution, and threaded all through is a sweet, winsome story of love and faith in sharp contrast to the wretched brutality of the Paris criminal class. Miss Claxton renders inimitably the character of Louise, the blind girl, and is ably supported by a strong company.

Virginia Drew Trescott and the company engaged to support her in the "Resurrection" are making a big hit everywhere in Tolstoi's great drama. The story of "Resurrection" is brutally strong and absorbingly interesting. It is a Russian play with it's scenes laid in St. Petersburg, Moscow and Siberia. The role of 'Maslova', which is taken by Miss Trescott affords unusual opportunities, all of which are taken advantage of by that most capable actress. The same play is now having a very successful run in New York, Paris and London, and Manager Traitel is the first to produce it in this part of the country. It requires a sixtyfoot car to transport the special scenic effects. The costumes worn are all from original plates—the same being importations from Russia. Judging from the popular demand forseats, it is safe to predict that "Resurrection" will do a bannar-breaking business and will be seen at Theater, Friday April 3. Prices, rows 12, 13, and 14, $1.00; Balance lower floor, 75 cents; Adults in gallery, 50 cents; children, 25 cents.
