Neither the hop growers of Oregon nor any other thoughtful, sensible citizens are frightened by the daily newspaper yarns or the Oregonian's cartoon relative to the alleged threats of eastern brewers to boycott Oregon hops on account of the temperance agitation in this state. Brewers will continue to buy hops to the best advantage to themselves, regardless of where they are grown. Of all things in the "booze" line beer is probably the least demoralizing, and while the beer-drinking habit makes no man wiser, wealthier or permanently stronger physically, it is not nearly so objectionable as the habit of absorbing the extract of corn and rye. We may next hear of the distillers boycotting the cereal growers of some state where the liquor question is an issue. Wouldn't that be a joke on Kansas?

Before the recent election in New York the managers of William Randolph Hearst's campaign predicted that he would be elected by a majority ranging all the way from 100,000 to double that figure. They are now calling his defeat by a mere 60,000 a "victory," and Hearst seems to agree with them. Mr. Hearst's opponents do not wish to deprive him of any satisfaction he may squeeze out of the returns.

The Corvallis Gazette has a house blown up in "Lincoln county," "over on the coast," "where excavation is in progress for a tunnel on the line of the Drain-Coos Bay railroad." We can't stand for that, although we sincerely wish excavation was in progress for a new railroad in Lincoln county. But hush—it's coming!

Apple agitation continues to be a good thing for Oregon. The county that can produce the just-as-good-as-Hood-River kind should get busy and do it. Scientific pruning, cultivation of the trees and even spraying would work wonders in Lincoln county, where "spraying is unnecessary." Do it now—that is, in season.

The recent floods along the northwestern border of Oregon are due largely to the slopover from the state of Washington.

Indians Must Pay Taxes.

The following dispatch from Washington appeared in the Oregonian of the 19th:

Whether local state authorities can tax the land of an Indian held in severalty, in the absence of explicit legislation giving such authority, was considered by the Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion handed down today in the case of James Gowdy against the Assessor of Pierce County, Washington. Gowdy is a Puyallup Indian and holds lands granted to him in severalty, with a provision in his patent from the Government which exempted the property from "sale, levy or forfeiture," while Washington should remain a territory, and afterwards, unless the state legislature should provide otherwise.

After the admission of the state a law authorizing, in general terms, the "alienation" of Indian-held lands was passed, but the Indian objected that anti-levy feature of his patent had not been removed by the enactment, and the Gowdy suit was instituted. The state courts held against him, and their finding was indorsed by today's decision. The opinion was delivered by Justice Brewer, who said that the fact that Growdy had become a citizen of the United States, as he had done by accepting land in severalty, had made him amenable to the tax laws. He also said that the act of the State Legislature covers tax levies as well as sales.

The above decision is said to apply to Indian lands on the Siletz and in other parts of Oregon. Assessor Lutz of Lincoln county will probably investigate the matter. It seems to be a question of citizenship. Can a man vote legally unless he is a citizen? If he is a citizen, is he not subject to taxation?

Cut this out and take it to Krogstad's drug store and get a free sample of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For biliousness and constipation they are unequaled. They improve the appetite, strengthen the digestion and regulate the liver and bowels.
