Portland Stock Report.

Cattle—Monday's cattle market opened with another large number of 1,600 head. There was a large offering of inferior quality steers and cows in the run, although there were a number of loads of good quality stuff here. There were a few loads of prime steers sold at $7.25 with other loads from $6.25 to $7. Inferior quality steers rather slow demand, although prices held steady on this class of stuff. Cow stuff scored another advance today of 10 to 25 cents. A few prime heifers brought $6 and a few cows $5.75, the bulk of prime cows selling at $5.50 to $5.60, with inferior grade as high as $3. Bulls were in good demand at slightly higher prices, although there were no real fat bulls in the trade. The best brought $4.25. Prime light calves sold 50 cents higher, bringing $8, although a few were sold from $6.50 to $7. Trading in the stockers and feeders division was limited to a few loads, prices ranging from $3 to $5.75.

Hogs—A moderate run of hogs was here Monday Prices were 10 to 15 cents higher than last week's close. Tops sold at $9.75, bulk going at $9.60 to $9.70.

Sheep—Sheep market is firm, with unchanged prices. Some fairly good yearlings here Monday that were taken at $7.40. Demand was good, although there was hardly enough to start packers. A bunch of fair lambs brought $8.30. Outside of this only a few other sales were made. Prime sheep of all grades remain in demand at higher prices.

PASTURE IRRIGATED; ALFALFA WITH HOGS

By pasturing irrigated alfalfa pastures with hogs, the superintendent of the Huntley (Montana) reclamation project experiment farm reports that he got returns in 1915 at the rate of $75 to $88 per acre. This estimated return he figures is equivalent to $10.84 per ton, on the farm, for the hay crop which was harvested and consumed by the hogs.

In discussing this experiment in a report of the work of that farm in 1915, just issued by the U. S. department of agriculture, he says in part:

"This rotation consisted of corn, flax, beets, and three years of alfalfa. The third year alfalfa and the corn are harvested by hogs, the object of this experiment being to ascertain the value of alfalfa and corn crops when so harvested.

"The alfalfa pasturing experiment was divided into two periods: April to July, or the spring period, and July to September, of the summer period. The plat used was divided into two equal portions and the hogs were pastured alternately for 10 days at a time on each part. This allows for more uniform growth and convenience in irrigating. In addition to the pasture the hogs were given a supplementary ration of two pounds of corn per day per 100 pounds of live weight.

"On April 24 five high-grade Duroc-Jersey hogs weighing 789 pounds were placed on the alfalfa plat. On May 24 it was found necessary to remove one hog, as the supply of feed was inadequate. The remaining four hogs were taken off July 14, and on the same date eight pure bred Duroc-Jersey shoats were placed on the plat. These shoats, having a total initial weight of 302 pounds, remained on the pasture until September 22.

"During the two peroids 619 pounds of pork were produced. The corn consumed during the season amounted to 1949 pounds. Estimating the value of the pork at 7 cents per pound gives a total return from the plat of $43.33. The value of the corn fed, estimated as worth $1.25 per 100 pounds, was $24.36. This leaves a net return from the alfalfa crop of $18.97 for the plat, which is at the rate of $75.88 per acre, as compared with the net return of $76.88 from a similar experiment conducted in 1914.

"These results and also those secured in 1913 and 1914 indicate that the posibilities of pasturing alfalfa with hogs should receive careful consideration by the farmers on the Huntley project.

Hogging Corn

"Four of the pigs used in the alfalfa pasturing experiment were transferred to the corn plat on October 1, 1915. At this time the corn was practically all matured. Twenty-five days were requored for the hogs to harvest the corn. During this time the hogs gained 216 pounds, or an average daily gain of 2.16 pounds per hogs. The yield of the quarter-acre plat was estimated to be 13.10 bushel, or 52.41 bushels per acre. Valuing pork at 7 cents per pound the hogs returned $15.12 per one-quarter acre, or $1.15 per bushel for the corn consumed. In other words, the hogs consumed 3.4 pounds of corn for each pound of gain. In the similar experiment conducted in 1914, hogs consumed 3.35 pounds of corn for each pound of gain."

Oregon Hens Lead at Eastern Shows.

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis.—That the laying capacity of his "Oregons" is not impaired by widely different environments is shown by the reports received today by Professor James Dryden, head of the poultry department at the Oregon Agricultural College, from the Storrs, Conn., and the Mountain Home, Mo., egg-laying contests.

At the Missouri contest the Corvallis fowls led all of the 104 entries in number of eggs for the month of September and thereby won the silver cup for the highest monthly average for the second time during the course of the competition. The four hens in the Oregon Agricultural College pen laid 106 eggs. They are now in second place for the eleven months of the contest and are gaining rapidly on the leading pen.

The weekly reports from the Storrs contest indicate that the "Oregons" will also lead their competitors there for the month also. They maintained their place last week in third position. The pen of Barred Rocks entered by the college took second place last week in egg production. This pen, which contains ten hens, has been sold to a Canadian buyer for $100.

In the Mountain Home contest the "Oregons" laid 1,055 eggs, White Leghorns, Hollywood Farm, Wash. 1,063, and White Plymouth Rocks, C. Daniels, Washington, 989.

Every spring the lights of the lighthouses along the coast lure to destruction myriads of birds enroute from their winter homes in the south to their summer nesting places in the north.

Will Codify Oregon Mining Laws

With Oregon only now beginning to enter upon the real development of its mineral resources, prospectors and miners find themselves almost completely at sea regarding their legal rights in the quest for the treasures under the earth. The state's mining laws are little known, and less understood. In many cases conflicts are encountered between the state and federal laws and the court interpretations thereon.

With these facts in mind, H. N. Lawrie, chief of the Oregon Bureau of Mines and Geology, has started a codification of the mining laws and a digest of court decisions. The outline of the work is now fairly well in hand, but Mr. Lawrie expects to have some experienced lawyers actually work it out.

Mr. Lawrie hopes to have the compilation prepared in such non-technical language as to allow the average prospector to understand it fully. The rights of the miner will be fully set forth, so that when he comes upon a deposit of metal or salt formation he may know how to proceed to profit by it.

The compilation probably will be issued in the form of a bulletin some time after the first of the year, when the legislative appropriation for the coming biennium is available.

Mr. Lawrie says every mail brings in some sort of question bearing on the legal aspects of mining and prospecting, many of which he is himself unable to answer. Inasmuch as Oregon's rich deposits of copper, chrome iron, tungsten and other valuable minerals are being sought after now more than ever before, Mr. Lawrie considers that the bureau could perform no more valuable service than to set out in brief and popular form just what rights the miners have.

Grants Pass Men Rope Black Bear

A party of prospectors from Grants Pass had the novel experience of roping and photographing a full-grown black bear a few days ago in the wilds near the Preston Peak mining district.

The party, consisting of T. E. Gilmore, A. C. Hoofer, W. H. Dana, Bert Dysert, Lee Morrison and Jim Allen, was proceeding through a mountain meadow when the dogs brought a large bear to bay. The men encircled the bear and Mr. Gilmore attempted to rope it with his lariat. The bear made a dash for liberty, running toward Hoofer, who climbed a fir stub with the bear right at his heels. The photographer caught Hoofer just as he was making a wild leap of ten feet from the stub to the ground to escape a wicked cuff from Bruin.

Mr. Gilmore then made a skillful cast of the rope, the loop settling over the bear's head. Snubbed to the horn of a saddle, the bear was brought out into the open, where he submitted to the wiles of the photographer and indulged in boxing matches with some of his captors.

The men were careful, however, to maintain a good distance, and the boxing was done with a long stick. Bruin was good at footwork, and one photo shows where he put his tormentors to sudden rout when he made a quick uppercut at them.

Bears have been especially plentiful in the hills this fall, and many have been killed.—Oregonian.
