WEATHER REPORT.

Light to moderately heavy rains have occurred during the last 24 hours in the Gulf states, the lower Mississippi valley and in northern New Mexico, due to the influence of a disturbance central over the Gulf of Mexico. Light precipitation is also reported at scattered places in the middle Atlantic states. In the northern states west of the Mississippi river and on the Pacific coast fair weather continues as a result of an immense high pressure area which extends from the Lake region westward to the Cascade mountains. This high area is advancing eastward, however, and the indications point to a development of a disturbance off the Washington coast. This storm will probably advance inland, following the eastward movement of the "high" and cause showery weather tonight or Saturday in western Oregon and western Washington, and increasing cloudiness Saturday in eastern Oregon, eastern Washington and Idaho. It will be warmer tonight west of the Cascade mountains and in southeastern Idaho.
