WEATHER REPORT.

The disturbance noted yesterday off the north Pacific coast has moved inland over British Columbia, without as yet causing any rain on the Pacific coast.

The most notable feature this morning was the high pressure area overlying the middle west, which has caused a moderate cold wave in the eastern states, where the temperatures are from 10 to 20 degrees below normal. It also continues unusually cold in the middle west, and heavy frosts have occurred in all the northern states from the Rocky mountains east to the lower Lake region. The frosts extended as far south as Oklahoma, northern Arkansas and Tennessee. The storm yesterday over Lake Huron is now off the New England coast. It has caused moderately heavy to heavy rains in the middle Atlantic and New England states, and heavy snow is reported in upper Michigan.

The indications are for rain in this district Thursday, with lower temperatures.
