WEATHER REPORT

The northern end of the western trough of low pressure has developed into a disturbance of decided character that is now central over Alberta. It has caused showers and thunderstorms in Washington, Idaho and Montana. The Dakota high pressure area has advanced to Iowa, and a new high pressure area has made its appearance over western Oregon. The disturbance over the upper St. Lawrence valley has disappeared at sea off the New England coast. Light to moderately heavy rains have occurred in Colorado, northern Arizona, New Mexico, the Texas panhandle, Oklahoma, western Nebraska, and at scattered places in the Atlantic and gulf states. Temperatures in eastern Oregon, eastern Washington, and Idaho have fallen from eight to 12 degrees since yesterday.

Indications are for showers and thunderstorms with cooler weather in this district tonight and tomorrow except in western Oregon and western Washington, where fair and warmer weather may be expected tomorrow.
