SEASIDE

(Special to The Journal.)

SEASIDE, OR., July 12.—The ideal summer weather has now arrived and the cool ocean breeze is being sought by numbers of city people. Owing to the unusual low tide, this week, clam digging has been a great sport. Early in the morning, for some distance the beach is covered with industrious people, men, women, boys and girls, all with shovels and picks with which to dig and carry the fruits of their labors.

The wheels of society as yet have not began to turn. Every one is busy getting settled. However, by the end of the week every one will be more or less comfortably arranged in their summer abode and the evenings will soon be occupied by many social functions.

NORTH BEACH

North Beach, Wash., July 12.—"McGowan's, next stop." Merely the brakeman announcing a station on the road from Megler to North Beach points. But back of that word, "McGowan," is an industrial history—salmon catching and packing on the Columbia. In 1862, when the late P. J. McGowan started catching and packing salmon, the Indian and the white man used small boats and speared their salmon. Oftentimes—the packer used no machinery—he salted the salmon and shipped them to the Sandwich isles, these being the only market at the time. P. J. McGowan, and later his sons, H. S., J. D. and J. W., saw the evolution of this industry from the Indian,
