GOVERNOR FINALLY WINS FIGHT AGAINST COMMANDANT ELDER

Executive Broached Matter at Board Meeting Soon After Taking Office.

KAY IS PREVAILED UPON

Secretary Olcott Sticks by Official Who Lost His Scalp Anyway.

concerned he considered Elder a very capable superintendent. Several years ago the secretary was located for a time at Roseburg and business men at that time told him that Elder was the only man who had ever been commandant who had made a success of the administration of the institution. There had been turmoil and chaos before Elder took the office and since that time everything had been satisfactory, he said.

The secretary of state inquired what had become of the investigation instituted by Representative Oro H. Porter of Roseburg. Porter, it appeared, had sought to show that Elder had allowed bills for labor that had not been performed at the institution.

Governor Wins Fight.

Governor Withycombe replied that there was "nothing in that Porter stuff." Kay agreed that Porter's activities had nothing to do with Elder's dismissal.

Olcott denounced what he declared was a despicable attempt to besmirch Elder's daughter. Porter came to him, he said, and told that he was seeking evidence to show that Elder's daughter had drawn pay from the state as an employe of the Soldiers' home at the same time she was employed by a milliner, Minnie Bell, in Roseburg.

It developed in Porter's investigation that the charges were absolutely false, and the girl had worked for the milliner only when she had not been employed at the state institution.

Kay insisted that the charges against the girl had not been considered in deciding to remove Elder. Olcott wanted to see some affidavits bearing on the Porter investigation.

"Record Mr. Kay and me as voting for the resolution," said Governor Withycombe, who adjourned the meeting without going further into the Porter probe.

Affidavits on file in the office of Recorder Goodin showed the efforts that had been made to "get" Elder through his daughter. The attempt was a failure, but showed the length to which the opposition to Elder went.

At the time Porter made his investigation here it was understood that the evidence was to be used as a basis on which Kay would explain his change of front from declaring that Elder was one of the best of the heads of institutions in the state to advocation of his dismissal.

The dismissal of Elder marks the end of a long fight waged by Governor Withycombe. Soon after he took office, the governor brought up the matter at a meeting of the board of control, but Kay and Olcott would not agree to a change. Olcott took the same stand that he maintained yesterday, asserting that Elder had made a good superintendent, and that he proposed to stand by a man when he made good as the head of an institution.

Kay then said he was not ready to vote for the dismissal of Elder. Kay had from time to time during the last four years expressed great satisfaction with the administration of Elder.

The stand by Kay and Olcott was far from pleasing to the governor.

"I Am a Republican."

"Gentlemen, I want you to know that I am a Republican first, last and all the time," he said heatedly.

It is known that the governor has never been at all satisfied with Elder on account of the fact that he believed Elder opposed him politically last year, as well as on a previous occasion.

When Withycombe lined up with Kay a month ago and agreed to vote for the dismissal of Dr. J. H. Thompson as head of the feebleminded institution, it was said that a trade had been made whereby Kay would stand with Withycombe for the removal of Elder.

A petition signed by practically every business man of Roseburg, asking that Elder be retained, was ignored by Kay and Withycombe. The petiton was filed early this year.

Inquiry at the office of the state board of control brought the information today that not a single charge or complaint against Elder was on file or had been at any time filed. The complaints, it appeared, had either been filed with Governor Withycombe or Treasurer Kay.

A letter from Grace Elder, daughter of the commandant, employed at the institution, who was harrassed by a little clique of Roseburg politicians who were anxious to oust Elder, is on file in the office of the board of control.

Was Ready to Quit.

In it Miss Elder says she was ready to quit at any time if it would be for the betterment of the institution or those in control or to satisfy Messrs. Marsters, Shoemaker and Porter, who had been interesting themselves in the futile effort to prove she had worked in a millinery store at the time she drew pay for working for the state.

She enclosed an affidavit from Minnie Bell, the milliner, which showed that she had not been employed in the millinery store at the time claimed by Porter and others.

"I had hoped we would remain here until I finished my work as worthy matron of the O. E. S., which came to me by popular choice, and I feel it means a great deal to me or any other young woman," she said in her letter.

Captain R. C. Markee, who has been elected commandant of the Soldiers' home at Roseburg, has lived in Portland six years. His residence is at 618 Prescott street and he is engaged in the jewelry business on the east side.

He is a member of Sumner Post, No. 12, Grand Army of the Republic. In the Civil war he was a member of company A, Thirty-fourth Illinois infantry. He was in the march with Sherman to the sea. He was connected with the Soldiers' home at Quincy, Ill., for a number of years. He was born in Harrison county, Ohio, June 20, 1845.

Roseburg Not Pleased.

Roseburg, Or., Sept. 4.—Expressions of regret and indignation were heard on every hand here today upon receipt of the news that W. W. Elder had been removed as commandant of the Oregon Soldiers' home, as it is felt that there is nothing behind the removal except politics.

Mr. Elder has been a most satisfactory official, both as to his care of the inmates and as to the general business management of the home, being in marked contrast with the record of his predecessor. He is deservedly popular with the old veterans in the home, and a large part of the Republicans of Douglas county were actively advocating his retention as commandant, and they are very indignant over this "piece of dirty politics," as one expressed it.

A small faction of the Republican party here have been after Elder for some time, and hoped to land a certain Douglas county man in the place, one of the representatives from this county having made a special trip to Salem to urge Elder's removal.

Others who have been urging his removal are A. C. Marsters, a local politician, and Carl O. Shoemaker, now state game warden, who has been conducting a campaign against him through his own newspaper here. It is safe to say that the present administration has added nothing to its popularity in Douglas county by Mr. Elder's removal.

Claims Precaution Is Taken.

Salem, Or., Sept. 4.—In an answer filed with the state public service commission in the case of G. H. Blackburn against the Portland Railway, Light & Power company to compel the installation of block signals at an alleged dangerous crossing at Cottrell station, the defendant says that whistles are blown, speed reduced to six miles an hour, travel on the highway is light and prominent signs are displayed warning people. The defendant thinks adequte precautions are now taken to protect people.

Class Makes Furniture.

Salem, Or., Sept. 4.—State Superintendent of Public Instruction Churchill is great interested in a report from C. T. Mudge, manual training director of the Eugene schools, telling of the completion by the students of the construction of all the furniture to be used in the new $110,000 high school at Eugene. The total cost of the work to the district was $1200, representing a saving of $600 over the bids of the various mills. It also furnished work for the manual training boys for nearly the entire summer. The boys also refinished all of the old desks, 1500 in all, thereby saving the district over $100.

Mr. Mudge's class in manual training assisted in making the school exhibit for the Oregon building at the Panama-Pacific exposition and visitors to the exhibit have been both pleased and astonished. Compliments have come from educators and others from all over the country.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our thanks to the many friends who assisted us so kindly during the recent illness and death of our beloved husband and father, also for the many beautiful floral offerings. Mrs. Josie Boden, Krueger Boden. (Adv.)

FOREIGN COMPANIES MAY USE ANY NAME THEY MAY DESIRE TO

State's Attorney General Upsets Old Ruling Which Barred Many Concerns.

WATSON ACT IS INDORSED

Former Corporation Commissioner Last January Started to Follow Letter of Law Instead of Opinion.

Any foreign corporation may transact business in Oregon, not only under its legal name as fixed by its articles of incorporation, but under any name it may assume and designate as the name it desires to use in the state, according to an opinion of Attorney General Brown, just rendered.

This opinion marks the reversal of a 15-year-old ruling of the attorney general's office, which up to this time has been followed by the corporation department, and which not only barred many foreign corporations from the transaction of business in Oregon, but has caused frequent friction between such corporations and the corporation department.

According to an opinion of the attorney general given in 1903, it was held that a foreign corporation, having a name which, in the opinion of the secretary of state, conflicted with the name of any corporation of record in the state, could not enter the state unless or until it changed its name so as to avoid the conflict. Under this ruling the Standard Oil company could not have entered the state of Oregon without changing its legal title had there been any corporation of a similar name on the record of the department when it made application to file its charter there.

Watson Changed Procedure.

There is a provision in the law, however, which says that a foreign corporation desiring to transact business in Oregon, when filing its papers, "must set forth a full name under which it proposes to transact business" in the state, and Corporation Commissioner Ralph A. Watson, during January last, abandoned the old opinion of the attorney general and ruled that the department would accept the filings of foreign corporations should they desire to operate in the state under a name other than their legal title.

Recently Mr. Watson presented the application of a Delaware corporation which desired to operate in the state under an assumed name, and Corporation Commissioner Schulderman, while admitting the desirability of the ruling from the standpoint of the department, questioned his authority under the law to accept and file the papers, and asked Attorney General Brown to pass upon the question.

Upsets Old Ruling.

The attorney general, realizing that his answer involved the overturning of a 15-year-old construction and the establishment of a new course of procedure for the state in its treatment of foreign corporations, went into the matter very thoroughly, as a result of which he reversed his own department and sustained Mr. Watson's construction.

It is believed that the new and more liberal rule will result in the entrance into the state of many foreign corporations which were barred out by the former construction of the statute, and will work for greater corporate activity in the state.

What Makes the Piano Play?

"Uncle Ben, Uncle Ben!" shouted Twinkle. "Come quick! Thereth a threet piano coming. I can hear it."

At the call, Scuffy came bounding down the stairs from the attic, where he had gone to search for an old hat suitable for playing cowboy, and Sister Bell dropped her embroidery to find out about the promised lark. Sure enough, from far up the street came the "tinkle, tinkle," of the piano. Sister Bell began to dance on the smooth grass. Scuffy turned a couple of cartwheels and began to whistle.

"I hope they have a monkey with them," he said, between turns. "I have a penny to give him if they have."

"I can't hear it now. Maybe it's gone away," breathed Sister Bell.

"No, it isn't," corrected Scuffy. "It's only just stopped playing for a minute. It's going to play another piece. It has to stop to catch its breath, I guess."

"But it don't breathe," was the protest.

"Of course it breathes, else how could it play?"

At this point Uncle Ben appeared on the scene to settle the all-important question of the moment.

"Uncle Ben," asked Sister, her cheeks flushed with the heat of argument, "does a piano breathe?"

"Of course, it does," interrupted Scuffy.

"I'm sorry to correct you, boy," said Uncle Ben, "but a piano does not breathe."

"Then how does it play?" indignantly.

"Did you ever take a string and draw it tightly between your teeth and stretch it to the fingers of one hand, while you twanged it with the other?"

"Ye-e-s."

"Then you know why a piano plays. It is made up of a whole lot of strings made of fine wire. When these strings are twanged by little hammers which we cause to strike when we hit the keys, the strings vibrate. The vibrations cause waves in the air, which hit our ears and cause sound."

"Why don't all the keys sound the same?" This from Sister Bell.

"Because the strings are made to grow shorter and shorter and are stretched tighter and tighter toward the top of the keyboard. These tighter, shorter strings vibrate faster than the longer, looser ones, and make a higher note.

"You have seen people ride past on bicycles. They stretch rubber from the seat of the bicycle to the back wheel. As they ride through the wind, the wind twangs the tightly drawn rubber band, causing it to vibrate and make a singing noise. The strings of the piano sing in the same way when they are twanged by the tiny hammers.

"How do we know which hammer to hit?"

"Because we know the keyboard, and that when we strike a certain key it will give a certain sound. By striking several of these keys at the same time, or certain ones in succession, we have a melody, a song."

"I think the piano is coming around the corner now," shouted Scuffy. "And oh, there's a monkey! Wait until I run and get my penny."

A few minutes later the children were taking Mr. Monkey by the hand, while the piano tinkled a merry tune, and the piano man smiled broadly at their delight.
