Small Novelty Plant To Begin Operations In City Very Soon

A new enterprise—the manufacture of a novelty, will be launched in Portland very soon but pending actual operations the owner desires that no names be used. For this reason, plain John Jones will have to suffice.

A few days ago he received notification that the castings used in making the novelty would be completed this week. Desiring to lose no time in getting the article on the market, he made full arrangements for assembling them and their machinery as soon as they were finished.

Part of the work calls for a skilled mechanic and a lathe and drill. The novelty, man hadn't invested in lathes so he got around the unnecessary expense by inserting a want ad in The Journal offering employment to a mechanic who owned a lathe.

In less than 24 hours Jones was in communication with exactly the kind of man desired. If it hadn't been for the ad, he says, he would be hunting yet.
