True Facts You Should Know

A used automobile has no established (as is) value. There is but one time when a used car can be said to have an established price and that is after a car of a given make, model and year have been put into a condition. Providing every car of that make, year and model is placed in the same condition, every one then has the same resale price. But when cars are considered from a "as is" standpoint—that is, their present condition—no two are worth the same money and there is no way to determine what each one is worth, except on expert account of what it costs to overhaul. The used cars you buy from us are put into a predetermined condition.
