Famine Conditions in Europe Elevates Corn

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—Famine conditions in Europe brought about fresh advances today in the corn market here. Prices closed strong, 1½c to 3⅝c net higher with December $1.25⅛ to $1.25½ and January $1.26⅛ to $1.26⅜. Oats finished ¾ @ ⅞c to 1¼ @ 1⅜c and provisions at a range varying from 17 cents off to a rise of $1.

Corn went upward from the start and closed at nearly the top figures of the day. Interest continued to center chiefly on the need of large supplies for trans-Atlantic countries that were reported as on the brink of starvation. Wet weather which threatened to hinder the crop movement was an additional bullish factor; besides, country offerings were light.

Strength and activity characterized the trade in oats as well as in corn. Hedging sales, however, became plentiful on the bulge.

Pravisions ascended with grain. Current gossip dwelt mainly on indications of immense quantities of meats and fats required for export.

Unsettled Session in New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Settlement of contracts for both accounts, fear of untoward events over the week-end and announcement that the local money pool intends to maintain existing credit restrictions served to unsettle today's stock market session.

Fully one-third of the trading was confined to such leaders as United States Steel, shippings, Mexican Petroleum, Southern Pacific and prominent equipments, other industrials, rails and specialties following in minor degree.

Marine preferred immediately manifested reactionary tendencies, falling 3½ points to its recent low figures, rallying materally, but also yieldin gagain in the final dealings.

Rails were dull until the end when pressure of offerings caused the Pacifics and coalers to surrender gains of 1 to 1½ points, the tone at the close being distinctly heavy Sales amounted to 315,000 shares.

Bonds in general were firm wth a slight easing among convertible rails and industrials Total sales, par value aggregated $3,550,000.

Old United States bonds were unchanged on call during the week.

The bank statement disclosed an expansion in actual loans for the week of almost $44,000,000 and a contraction of $38,500,000 in excess reserves, reducing total reserves to about $29,000,000 .

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CXXXVIII

THE VOICE OF THE WOMAN WHO ANSWERED THE TELEPHONE IN DICKY'S OFFICE.

"Margaret!" My mother-in-law's voice was almost tragic. "Richard has gone off with my trunk checks."

"Why, of course, he has," I returned, wondering a little at her anxious tone. "I suppose he expects to give them to an expressman and have the trunks brought up this morning."

"Richard never remembered anything in his life," said his mother tartly. "Those trunks ought to be here before I leave for the day."

"Oh, I don't think it would be possible for them to arrive before we have to start, even if Dicky gives them to an expressman right away, as I am sure he will do."

It seemed queer to be defending Dicky to his mother, but I felt a curious little thrill of resentment that she should criticize him. I sometimes may judge Dicky harshly myself, but I don't care to hear criticism of him from any other lips, even those of his mother.

"Richard will carry those checks in his pocket until he comes home again, if he is lucky enough not to lose them," said his mother decidedly. "I wish you would telephone him at his studio and remind him that they must be looked after."

Obediently I went to the telephone. I knew Dicky had plenty of time to get to the studio as it was by a short walk from our apartment.

"Madison Square 3694," I said in answer to central's request for "number."

When the answer came I almost dropped the receiver in my surprise. It was not Dicky's voice that came to my ears, but that of a stranger, a woman's voice rich and musical.

"Yes?" with a rising inflection. "this is Mr. Graham's studio. He has not yet reached here. What message shall I give him, please, when he comes in?"

"Please ask him to call up his home." Then I hung up the receiver and turned from the telephone, putting down my agitation with a firm hand until I could be alone.

"Dicky has not yet reached the studio," I said to his mother calmly. "I think very probably he has gone to see an expressman about your trunks. If you will pardon me I have a few things to attend to before we start on our trip. Is there anything I can do for you."

"No, thank you." Mrs. Graham's tone was still the cold, courteous one that she used in addressing me. "I suppose I can ring for Katie when I am ready to have my dress fastened?"

"Oh! by all means," I returned. I thought bitterly of the little services I used to perform for my own mother. How gladly I would anticipate the wants of Dicky's mother if she would only show me affection instead of the ill-concealed aversion with which she regarded me.

Miss Grace Draper?

My mother-in-law went to her room, and I, walking swiftly into mine, closed and locked the door behind me. I threw myself face downward on the bed, my favorite posture when I wished to think things out.

The voice of the woman at the studio haunted me. It was strange, but familiar, and I could not remember where I had heard it.

What was a woman doing in Dicky's studio at this time of the morning, anyway? I knew that Dicky employed feminine models, but I also knew that he made it a point to be at the studio before the model was due to arrive.

"I suppose I am an awful crank," he had laughed once, "but no models rummaging among my things for mine."

I knew that Dicky employed no secretary, or at least he had told me that he did not. I heard him laughingly promise himself that when his income reached $10,000 a year he would hire one.

All at once the solution to the mystery dawned upon me. The rich musical voice belonged to Grace Draper, the beautiful girl whom Dicky had first seen on a train on our memorable trip to Marvin.

He had not rested until he had found out her identity. She was just the type he wished for a model, but he had feared that he could not get her to pose for him.

The Veriest Nonsense.

It had turned out, however, that her whole life was centered in her ambition to become an artist. She gladly accepted Dicky's proposition to pay her liberally for the hours she spent in posing for him and to give her the use of his studio and the benefit of his help and instruction at other times.

Why had not Dicky told me that she was at the studio? The question rankled in the back of my brain.

That was not my main concern, however. What swept me with a sudden primitive emotion, which I know must be jealousy, was the picture of that beautiful face, that wonderful figure in daily close companionship with my husband.

I remembered her appearance on the train. She was absolutely one of the most stunning creatures I had ever seen in my life. If I had read her rightly, too, life had hardened her a trifle, had chilled whatever generous impulses she might have possessed, had left her perfectly poised, ready to meet any emergencies or to take any chance.

That she had the trick of being perfectly able to conceal all knowledge of any admiration directed at herself, while at the same time being aware of it and relishing it, I knew by my observation of her demeanor on the Marvin train.

Suppose she should fall in love with Dicky! To my mind I could not see how any woman could help it. Would she have any scruples about endeavoring to win Dicky's love from me?

My common sense told me that this was the veriest nonsense. But I could no more help my feelings than I could control the shape of my nose.

The ring of the telephone bell put a temporary end to my speculations. I pulled myself together in order to talk calmly to Dicky, for I knew it must be he who was calling.

TO GET WORK FOR SOLDIERS.

SEATTLE, Nov. 15.—Suggestion was made to the commanding officer at Camp Lewis today by Lawrence Wood, director of the United Saates employment bureau for this district, that a branch of the bureau be opened at Camp Lewis for the benefit of soldiers about to be returned to civilian life. Feasibility of the plan, it is said, will depend upon the method by which the men are to be released from military service.
