REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 558

FOR WHOM IS GRACE DRAPER LOOKING AS HER BEAUTIFUL EYES SEARCH THE STRANGE RESTAURANT?

I dug my fingers into my palms in a desperate effort to betray no sign of emotion when I caught sight of Grace Draper, the girl who had caused me so much misery and who I firmly believed to be the sender of the anonymous newspaper clippings which had frightened me.

I knew that Lillian was watching me—Lillian, who in one swift moment had drained and put aside her own cup of bitter humiliation in seeing her recreant husband, Harry Underwood, whom she had thought was in South America, enter the cafe at Grace Draper's side, and I struggled to banish the weakness which seemed creeping upon me.

A quick low sentence in Spanish came from Lillian's lips, and Mr. Cabineros, who sat on my side of the table next the aisle, leaned toward me, ostensibly for the purpose of filling my glass from the bottle of Spanish wine which stood before us, but really, as I dimly realized, to shield me from any wandering glances.

"Dink this quickly," he said in so low a tone that no one beyond our table could possibly have heard him. But there was a note of authority in his voice, and I obediently clutched the glass of wine and drank its contents.

I heard my teeth chattering against the rim of the glass and realized that I was making an absolute idiot of myself and, worse than that, failing Lillian. She had planned this expedition with such infinite care to avoid our identity being known, even to costuming us as South American women, and here I was endangering the whole scheme by my weakness.

Either the wine or the dread of having Lillian lose faith in me steadied and stimulated me, enabled me to sit erect and to resume the pretence of eating, which Grace Draper's entrance had interrupted.

"Good girl!" Lillian murmured, and the approval in her eye made me resolve to endure anything rather than disappoint the woman to whom I felt I owed so much fealty.

Try as I might, however, to affect utter indifference, I couldn't keep my eyes from straying occasionally toward the table where Grace Draper and Harry Underwood had been seated. Fortunately for me, their chairs were arranged so the girl presented only a profile view, and while Harry Underwood could have looked directly at me if he had chosen to do so, I felt safe in the disguise Lillian had given me. Harry Underwood's eyes were not likely to rest with more than a casual passing glance upon any woman approaching middle age and with no more prepossessing qualities of face and figure than those with which Lillian's disguise had endowed me.

A Problem That Fascinates.

So I felt safe in studying the couple whose life threads had been so strangely, almost tragically, interwoven with mine. I paid little attention to Harry Underwood, save to remark that while still the strikingly handsome, debonair man of the world he had been when I had first seen him, there was that in his appearance which betrayed he was drinking more heavily than usual. There was something sombre in his face, also, and I wondered if perhaps the better nature of the man—if, indeed, he had a better nature buried beneath the sinister, selfish personality that is his—did not occasionally stir itself in remorse for his caddish brutality toward Lillian.

But on Grace Draper's exquisite profile and beautiful figure my eyes rested with intent scrutiny. The personality of the girl who once had so nearly wrecked my life's happiness, and who I fear will never give up her mad passion for Dicky and her determination to be revenged upon me, has always fascinated even while it repelled me. The contrast between the absolute perfection of her face and the distorted soul of her is a problem that never loses interest for me.

Eyes That Never Rest.

Unlike her companion, she had neither put on flesh, nor was there the least sign of dissipation about her. That she was in the pink of physical condition every movement of her supple body showed. But her face, exquisitely rounded and tinted though it was with the glow of health, yet held an indefinable air of hardness, sordidness, which even Harry Underwood's saturnine countenance did not equal.

She didn't have much to say to her companion, and there was no hint of affection between the two. I guessed that their association was pre-eminently a self-seeking one, each making use of the other's talents in the queer, sinister life they had made for themselves.

It wasn't long before the feminine intuition which enables one woman to read another discovered for me the fact that Grace Draper was searching the cafe for someone. Her eyes were never still, but restlessly roved from one table to another over the large room. And the thing I feared came to pass. Grace Draper turned around and swept our table with her searching eyes.

FOOLING WITH HEALTH SERIOUS

I have frequently asked druggists "What do you push in a blood medicine?" The answer usually came, "The kind I can make the most money on." My answer has always been "Not me." I have succeeded pretty well and I have always recommended the one that I had found by experience to be the best and the one I would be willing to take myself or give to members of my own family. I have never offered to the public a medicine we do not use at home. This is why I can offer "Number 40 For The Blood," with a clear conscience; we have not only tried it on thousands of others, but on ourselves. We take it in all cases where a blood medicine is needed no matter in what form it shows itself and we get splendid results in constipation, kidney, stomach and liver troubles. I firmly believe if every one would begin in the spring and take "Number 40" they would escape malaria and fevers in all forms. J. C. Mendenhall, 40 years a druggist, Evansville, Ind. British Navy Compared to American in Parliament

LONDON, March 31.—His attention being called in the house of commons today to the American naval estimates, Walter Hume Long, first lord of the admiralty entered into a detailed comparison. He showed that at the current rate of exchange when 23,000,000 pounds for end-of-war expenditures was subtracted from the British estimates, the American estimates were 44,000,000 pounds in excess of the British. While the personnel of the British navy was being reduced, the American estimates provided for an increase in personnel.
