A SILO ON EVERY FARM IN SALEM DISTRICT

Every farmer in the Salem district ought to read the Salem Slogan pages of The Statesman of this morning—every word.

A good many thousands of them will.

More than this, every farmer in this district without a silo should profit by the reading—

Should have a silo on his farm.

For no farm should be without a few farm animals.

They are necessary in the keeping up of the fertility of the soil.

And silage is necessary for the proper feeding of farm animals.

A silo is a pasture under cover.

It is the cheapest way to store feed

Salem is a silo center.

The Chas. K. Spaulding Logging Co. are the largest manufacturers of silos in this section. They ship silos all over the coast. One of their greatest fields is down in the Imperial valley in California.

There are a few paragraphs in the advertisement of this company in this issue that are noteworthy, as follows:

"Do you know that over half of the 250,876,000 tons of stover and fodder crops in the United States annually goes to waste?

"Do you know that never in history has a lesser number of tons of hay paid for an Indiana silo?

"Do you know that you pay for a silo every year or two whether you buy one or not?"

The latter paragraph means that the farmer pays for the silo either in loss without a silo or in profit with one.

Our farmers can raise no end of silage crops.

In the past year or two, a Yamhill county farmer has demonstrated that sunflower and corn silage is better than corn silage without the sunflowers; richer for stock feed, and better for poultry.

Think of that combination.

Our farmers can raise sunflowers and corn together at the rate of at least 15 tons to the acre.

They can raise enough on a very small tract to fill a small silo.

And the land is benefitted by the mixed crop.

The following are some paragraphs of a piece of current silo literature:

"Our domestic animals never go on a strike. They are patient, mute toilers for us. They do all they can and they can do only as we supply them with raw material. No man ever saved money by starving his cattle. You cannot get something for nothing and the wise feeder knows that to feed his animals well and cheaply means the greatest profit.

"For thirty years the silo has been demonstrated to be the greatest economic means known in scientific feeding. It saves all the crop, saves a crop which might be wasted through drought, frost or hail.

"All the great dairy records are made with silage in the ration. Most of the champion steers at our stock shows have been fed on silage. It is nutritious, grasslike, succulent, easily digested, stimulates the appetite and gives thrift to the animal.

"Silage with alfalfa or clover hay mikes a balanced ration and wonderful results can be obtained by these two feeds alone. Silage should form the bulk of the ration for it is cheap, succulent and contains the food elements desired by our animals. If feed must be purchased let it be the concentrates, such as bran, oil meal, cotton seed meal, etc.

"Ask the man who has used a silo for several years what he thinks of his investment. Inquire among the successful breeders what they think of the silo. All evidence points to the fact that the silo is the most economic equipment on the farm."

In conclusion: A silo on every farm in the Salem district will make this a land of milk and money; to say nothing of honey.

It will help to conserve the virgin fertility of the soil, and to increase it.

Silos will make Salem grow to keep pace with the growing country of which it is the market and manufacturing center.

The Salem Slogan subject for next week will be legumes, and the following week it will be asparagus.

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

A silo on every farm.

That's the stuff; that's the slogan.

It will make Salem fat with butterfat.

It will make this a land of milk and money.

A silo is a green pasture under a roof; a canned clover field; a cold storaged corn field; a preserved sunflower patch.

The silo makes it spring all the year around for the cow and the horse and the pig and the sheep.

Remember: The farmer with live stock pays for a silo every year or two whether he has one or not. He pays either in profits or losses.

The silo salesman is the scout of prosperity. His welcome should be warm. Kill the fatted calf for him.

The Leadbetter crowd is spreading out. They have now enough sites for a dozen more factories; besides enough room to make the biggest paper mill in the world in Salem.

You Can't Brush Or Wash Out Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

Bonds Certified for Grants Pass District

The secretary of state yesterday certified $106,000 in bonds issued by the Grants Pass irrigation district. The bond issue recently received the stamp of approval from the state irrigation securities commission and a guarantee of interest will be asked. Wilford Allen, former member of the state accident commission, now secretary of the Grants Pass district, was here in connection with the issue.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 563

WHAT DOES HARRY UNDERWOOD MEAN BY HIS PARTING REMARK?

"Well, well! What a charming family party!" said Harry Underwood. "How are you, Senor Matadorilla? Haven't seen you in a coon's age."

He stood beside the cafe compartment in which Lillian Underwood, Katherine Sonnot and I, dressed as Latin-American women, were seated with Mr. Cabineros, a genuine Latin, who had accompanied us at Lillian's behest, and the bluff, hearty tones in which he voiced his greeting would have deceived anyone who did not know him well. But I caught, as I knew did Lillian, the underlying note of mocking devilment in his tones as well as in the pseudonym he bestowed upon Mr. Cabineros, whom I was certain he had never seen before in his life, although he was holding out his hand to the elder man as if they were bosom friends.

Mr. Cabineros, however, was equal to the occasion. With grave courtesy he took the hand Harry Underwood gave him and responded in carefully couched words:

"Thank you. You are very kind."

"And the charming senorita, Margaret, too," the light tones, with an undernote of mockery went on, and he extended his hand to me. There was nothing else for me to do but to place mine within his. He held it lightly but firmly, and bending past Mr. Cabineros toward me, said in a low, rapid tone, from which all mockery had fled:

"I haven't the slightest idea what all this mummery in which you and Lil and your other charming friend—whom I have not the pleasure of knowing—have gotten yourselves up in, but you can't fool an old theatrical man. I don't believe you expected to meet me here, Lil, or you wouldn't have pulled this stunt. But I want you all to 'git now while the gittin's good.' The charming lady at the other table is so absorbed in her new acquaintance that she won't notice your departure. I told her just now that I had spied some acquaintances who were just going, so she will suspect nothing. But if you ever give her the chance to get her peepers on you she'll imagine you're tracking her, she has a fool idea of that sort anyway, and I don't want to be responsible for the result.

"Now remember what I tell you. I'm going back now, and as I'm pretty broad-shouldered, I think I can keep her from getting too good a look at you. So long. See you later, lady fair. And Lil—don't try any more Sherlock Holmes disguises, at least not while I'm in the offing."

The Final Picture.

He sauntered back to the other table without a look toward the woman who had been his faithful wife and stanch comrade for years. I noticed that though he had addressed her, he had carefully avoided looking toward her, and I wondered if he in reality was not ashamed and afraid to meet her eyes. There had been that in his manner, however, which reassured me on one point—I was sure Grace Draper would know nothing from him of our presence in the cafe.

I had fresh cause to admire Lillian Underwood in the next few minutes. I knew that it must have galled her to accept any sort of favor at the hands of the man who had treated her so caddishly. But evidently every personal feeling was subordinated to the service in which she was, and she siezed with eagerness the opportunity he had given her to leave the cafe unobserved.

"Girls, get ready to leave at once," she said tensely. "Mr. Cabineros, the waiter and the check. Madge, watch Harry and Grace Draper, and when you're sure everything is all right we'll get out of here pronto. Have your wraps all arranged. We don't want to loiter a minute, but don't hurry out, walk leisurely. Harry will see to it that she doesn't catch a good long look at us."

We followed her directions minutely, and were soon on our way to the door. I had a panic-stricken impulse to run like a frightened rabbit as soon as I had left the table, but schooled my footsteps to a sedate leisureliness.

At the door I couldn't resist a swift parting glance at the table where Grace Draper and Harry Underwood sat. I knew that I was far enough away so she couldn't possibly detect my identity. But she evidently hadn't turned her head toward us. She was still gazing up into the face of Allen Drake, and although I couldn't see her expression, she was using all the battery of dainty Gallic shrugs and fetching gestures of her exquisitely formed hands I had seen her use when trying to attract Dicky's admiration.

What Troubles Madge.

Whether in mockery or in sincerity, or for some other purpose of his own, Allen Drake was playing the game of flirtation she had started with as much zest as she. And looking on in a detached, impersonal manner, stood Harry Underwood, the man who had accompanied the girl from South America. He might have been a waiter standing at attention for any interest he manifested in her doings.

The conviction seized me that whatever feeling, evanscent or otherwise, that Harry Underwood had once entertained for the girl with him it had now completely vanished. Their association must be one of self-interest, if they were not linked together in a bond of sordid treachery to their country.

For one reason, and one only, I should have been glad to see Harry Underwood completely absorbed in a passion for his beautiful companion. That reason I hardly dared acknowledge even to myself. But it had its roots in the parting remark he had made to me as he stood with my reluctant hand held in his but a few minutes before:

"So long. See you later, lady fair."

Alsea Lumber Camp Will Have Sewer and Water Works

The state engineering department is approving plans for a sewer and water supply system for the Alsea River Lumber company's camp at Alpine, Lane county, where about 150 workmen make their headquarters. It will be a gravity system.

The department is also passing on water supply systems for the cities of North Powder and Enterprise, the former procured from artesian wells and the latter from springs. Under the law this work is under the jurisdiction of the state board of health, but because of a shortage of funds the board has it done by the engineering department.

People have blamed a lot of their ignorance and negligence on Providence, but that is another excuse which doesn't work as well as formerly.
