MARKET ON WHEAT RALLIES SOMEWHAT

European Exchange Strengthens, Which Affects Chicago Situation

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—Helped by strength of European exchange, the wheat market today rallied somewhat from recent sharp declines in price. The closing was firm 3-8 to 1 cent net higher, with May $1.16 1-2 to $1.16 5-8 and July $1.11 5-8 to $1.11 3-4. Corn finished unchanged to 1 1-4 lower, oats 1-8 at 1-4 to 1-4 up and provisions varying from 7 cents decline to 5 cents advance.

Houses with eastern and foreign connections were early buyers of wheat and gave the market an upward impetus, which, although afterward temporarily more than offset, through increased selling, was again in full force during the last half of the day.

Demand for wheat grew more impressive in the final dealings, and with many previous sellers trying to even up trades, the market closed at practically the top figures. Nevertheless, other bears contended that broadly speaking the day's recovery was only a natural reaction after the break which of late had been recorded.

Corn was weak, owing in some degree to the prevailing mild weather. Oats were firmer with wheat.

Provisions held about steady in the absence of any aggressive action either way on the part of leading interests.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

CHAPTER 219

How Lillian Underwood Came to Madge's Rescue

Old Betty's dinner was one of the masterpieces we have learned to expect from her, and we were all valiant trenchermen. Even my vague uneasiness concerning a telephone conversation Dicky had with Edith Fairfax had no power to lessen the hungry zest with which I discussed the delicious viands. We had been shunted from our first train to the day coaches so rapidly that we had had no opportunity to get anything to eat, and I was as famished as Dicky appeared to be.

Back in the white and crimson living room with our coffee, Lillian kept the conversational ball in the air with all the juggling skill she possessed, while Dicky lit a cigar and lay back in his chair in luxurious ease.

"This is the life," he said, smiling engagingly at Lillian. "You certainly know how to live, old dear. I do not know a more comfortable menage anywhere."

"That is all because of Betty," Lillian replied, while I silently chuckled over the Machiavellian tactics I began to suspect she was using. If she could lead Dicky to think that the plan for leaving him in the apartment was due to his own initiative, things would be very much easier for us.

Lillian's Ruse

"How did you manage to keep her in all this jazz band domestic performance?" he asked lazily.

"In the first place because she is old and used to the place."

"The old cat in the home garret," interposed Dicky.

"Exactly. In the second place she has common sense—a thing almost as rare nowadays as the dodo, and knows that it would be most unlikely to find another place where she could rule the roost as absolutely as she does here, and in the third place—"

"You raised her wages," Dicky said slyly.

"Yes, I did," Lillian returned defiantly, while he laughed delightedly.

"Why shouldn't I? She's one of the best cooks in New York, and she's so used to running this house that I never have to give my housekeeping a thought. I'd be an anointed idiot to let her go for want of a little money."

"That's the trouble with the whole economic situation," Dicky said oracularly. "Everybody's been milling around in an ever-widening whirlpool of rising wages until—"

"'Ever-widening whirlpool' is good, Dickybird. You can't improve on that if you talk all night."

The Ruse Works.

He grinned reluctantly. "Oh! You know what I mean, perfectly. But I think you're right in this particular case. This certainly is the most comfortable place I've seen in a long time. Gives me the willies to think of going out and opening up that shebang of ours. I say, Madge, can't you tell Jim and Katie what to do, and you and I go to an apartment hotel here in the city until the place is dismantled? You'd have all your time, then, to look up places. I'm going to be so busy the next few weeks with orders that I don't know where I'm getting off. I ought not to spend the time commuting out to Marvin."

"If you were looking for a furnished apartment with a trained maid, now," Lillian said demurely, "I could recommend this one very highly."

The amazed look which crossed Dicky's face was ludicrous.

"What — what — do — you — mean?" he stammered.

"Why, I've been wanting to get Marion away from the city for some time, but didn't see how I could go so far, myself, and Madge assures me that your mother and father would be delighted to have Marion down there for a few weeks. So I'm going to send her down in a day or two, and then I'm going house hunting in the suburbs. I can sublet this apartment for anything I have the nerve to ask, for a month or five years, when I finally want to give it up. So if you'll stay here, Dicky-bird, it'll be a godsend to me, for Betty would be wild if she didn't have somebody to cook for. Madge and I can divide our time between Marvin and here, with trips on the side in search of homes for both of us."

For a tense second I wondered whether her ruse would succeed. But we were not long left in doubt. Dicky rose, walked over to Lillian's chair, pulled her to her feet, and gave her a mighty hug and a smacking kiss that almost could have been heard in the street.

"You're always the little lifesaver, Lil. I'll tell the world!" he exclaimed. "I'm not going to stand on any ceremony in accepting your plan. And I needn't ask Madge how she'd like it. I have vivid recollections of our last moving from the Brennan place, and I think her idea of a perfect moving day would be with me about 20 miles away, headed west. By the way, won't that let me out of going down to Marvin tomorrow? You can attend to things, can't you, Heart-of-my-life?"—he swept me a bow — "and I really ought to get to the studio."

I had hard work to conceal my relief and exultation at his proposal, even as I demurely assented to it. If he could dismiss the trip to Marvin that carelessly he was not as interested in seeing Edith Fairfax again as I had feared.

STOCK QUOTATIONS STRONG AT CLOSE

British Proposal on Oil Fields and Break in Fisher Stock Features

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—Prices in today's stock market opened strong, reacted in the early afternoon and then strengthened again before the close, making final quotations irregularly higher. The afternoon reaction accompanied marking up of the call money rate from four to five per cent, news of the Turkish region of the British proposal regarding the Mosul oil fields and a sensational break in Fisher body stock which dropped from 203 to 162, and then rallied to 172 for a net loss of 28 1-4 points.

The reaction was halted by a bullish demonstration in the rubber shares, which accompanied announcement of another increase in the price of crude rubber to 37 cents a pound. There also was a heavy accumulation of railroad shares just before the close, several investment issues gaining 1 to 1 1-2 points.

Trading continued to be largely a professional affair, the volume of sales being lower than that of yesterday, which was the smallest full day session since the middle of last August. The extreme dullness made it difficult to ascribe any particular reason for the fluctuations of most prices.

Call money opened at 4 percent, advanced to 4 1-2 in the late afternoon and thence to five, where it closed. Government withdrawals from local banks during the day amounted to $29,500,000 with heavy withdrawals also reported by interior institutions. Trading was active in the time money market.

The commercial paper market also was more active. The bulk of the prime names command 4 1-4 per cent.
