Amazing Grace, How Sweet the Sound

Rev. John Newton, 1725-1807

"Amazing grace, how sweet the sound
"That saved a wretch like me!
"I was lost, but now am found—
"Was blind, but now I see."

John Newton was taken away to sea by his father, a sea captain, at the age of eleven, the beginning of 18 years of stirring adventure, during which time he sank to the lowest depths of life. After seven years, he came back to England for a vacation and met a young girl of fourteen years, who completely captured his heart. So great were her charms, that he missed his next boat. After three more years at sea, he was brought home a deserter in irons, degraded and flogged.

This incident eventually led him to a position as a slave trader and he found his way to an island off the African coast, where he lived a profligate, profane and licentious life, eating what bits of food the slaves would give him. When vessels neared, he would hide, out of shame for his condition.

Finally he flagged a boat which came near the island, one day, and after some hesitation, the captain took him on board. A luckier circumstance there could not have been, for this very captain had been commissioned to find the young man, by his father, who had heard of his condition. At first Newton refused to return home, but when the captain lied and told him that he had come into a fortune and added that Mary Catlett, the girl, wanted him back, he consented.

Some time later, we find Newton ministering to a little parish at Olney, a curate of the Church of England. Here he entered into the lives of his people with hearty sympathy and told them of his wanderings in far countries. In his sermons and books and hymns, he never tired of telling them how God had lifted him up from the horrible pit into which he had fallen.

One of the hymns of this period was "Amazing Grace, how sweet the sound" which tells the story of his life. Like the apostle Paul, he never could quite forget that he had sinned away so many years of his younger manhood.

Newton was a close friend of William Cowper, a friendship which grew because of the great similarity between their lives. Newton was a wild, disbelieving blasphemer; Cowper an irresolute, despairing would-be suicide. Both turned to God, both sought his grace, found it and sang it to the ages. They worked together and many of the hymns are considered "indistinguishable."

The teachings of his pious mother never left Newton and even in the darkest years of his life, he never forgot her. It is possible that her spirit eventually led him to the high life which he lived while a minister of the church in England.
