Soldier Clearly Had Right to Be Weak and Weary

WASHINGTON — Pvt. Andrew J. Caparisos seemed a trifle weak when he reported to a new commanding officer at Camp Stewart, Ga., and no wonder. In the last four years he had survived:

Three torpedoings.

Fifteen months internment in Africa.

Air raids on England.

Twice adrift in the Atlantic, once for 16 days.

Shrapnel wounds in the Free French Battle of Dakar.

Of Greek ancestry, and born in Pensacola, Fla., he went back to Greece at the age of three. When the war started, he joined the Greek merchant marine. After his Greek ship was torpedoed, he joined the French merchant marine, and was promptly torpedoed again. One war experience followed another, and last September he returned to the United States, proved citizenship and entered the army.

Before the war he weighed 165, finally dropped to 100 and now is back at 135. The officer at Camp Stewart at first thought he should have Caparisos transferred to limited service, but when he learned what the new soldier had survived he promptly changed his mind.

PANAMA CITY, Fla.—(AP)—Corporal Peter Boublis, army aerial gunnery student at nearby Tyndall field, says he has a heck of a time keeping track of his brothers.

Six are serving with the navy somewhere in the Atlantic; four more are in the army and scattered over various fighting fronts.

Corp. Boublis is one of 20 living children of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Boublis of Jersey City, NJ.

Knives for Use On Foe Offered By Prison Guard

STATE COLLEGE, Pa.—(AP)—Attention servicemen: if you need a good knife it's yours for the asking. Just drop a line to Don Hutchison at his home-made workshop in State College.

Don, a guard at Rockview penitentiary, never made a knife until last January. Then he heard on the radio how adept the marines are with the blades in hand-to-hand fighting and how our servicemen need the weapons. Since that time nearly 200 rugged, razor sharp, cherry handled knives have gone out of his work-shop.

More than just an interest in providing knives keeps Hutchinson at his bench after finishing his regular trick at the prison each day. His son, who served under General MacArthur in Australia, was the second boy from State College to be killed in action.

Garden Beauty
