Bishop Urges Church to Be Daring, Heroic

SALT LAKE CITY, July 13 (AP) – Bishop James Chamberlain Baker of Los Angeles told delegates from 10 western states attending a Methodist church conference today that "There is in our churches altogether too little daring and heroic purpose."

He described as "pious irrelevancy" that kind of religion which makes no difference in social, economic and political life.

Bishop Baker's address represented a message from the western college of bishops to the church's western jurisdictional conference. Others in the college are Bishops Wilbur E. Hammaker of Denver and Bruce R. Baxter of Portland.

"If the church is to have moral and spiritual leadership, it must challenge existing ideas and prejudices which, if allowed to prevail, will forever make impossible a Christian way of life and a Christian organization of society," the Los Angeles churchman said.

The address mentioned the growth of population in the west, adding that "Next to the northeastern states, the Rocky mountain and Pacific coast states constitute the most highly urbanized section of the United States."

Bishop Baker expressed a hope that "the organized power of wealth" would not block the opening of irrigation projects designed to benefit the small-scale farmer.

Frederick L. Petersen of Walla Walla, Wash., was elected conference secretary. He appointed a number of assistants, including Rev. Cecil Riston, Great Falls, Mont.; F. M. Phelps, Portland.
