Fence Riding Laid to McKay Over Power

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Mansfield (D-Mont.) accused Secretary of Interior McKay Tuesday of "trying to ride both sides of the fence" in the government's new power policy.

McKay, announcing the policy last week, said the department recognizes that the primary responsibility for meeting power needs rests with local interests.

He said the department will continue to build big multi-purpose projects and even single-purpose projects in cases where they cannot be provided by local communities.

Mansfield in a statement called the whole announcement "loosely worded."

"All the recent talk about 'permitting' local communities, states and private citizens to build dams or multi-purpose hydro-electric power projects under a 'new' interior department power policy is silly," Mansfield said.

"The Democrats have been encouraging local participation in the development of natural resources throughout the 20 years that we have gone ahead to build the projects that no one would build.

"Now we are told by Secretary of the Interior McKay that no group, least of all the federal government, should have a monopoly on resource development.

"There never has been a federal monopoly on power. The policy of the Democratic administrations has always been that there is room for both public and private power in this country and that each in his own field can contribute to the common good.

"The development of federal power projects has brought about a lowering of electric rates to the consumers in areas affected.

"So far as I know the revenues of the private power companies on the whole have increased substantially during the past 20 years — due in part at least to the fact that have been able to buy surplus power from federal projects at wholesale rates.

"This new policy is so loosely worded that it appears to me Secretary McKay is trying to ride both sides of the fence as has been his policy to date on the private-public power question."

Monroe Riot Probe Set by Legislature

YAKIMA (AP) — A hearing into the causes and responsibility for the riot and fire at the state reformatory will be held next Tuesday and Wednesday by the Legislature's Interim Committee on State Institutions.

The hearing date was set Tuesday by Sen. Neil J. Hoff, Tacoma Republican who heads the group. Hoff is attending the district convention of Kiwanis International here.

Hoff said the committee may urge the immediate return of Governor Langlie from Norway, where he is vacationing, because the outbreak caused serious financial problems requring decisions from the executive branch of state government.

The senator was seconded by a Democratic committee member, Sen. Albert D. Rosellini of Seattle. Rosellini, minority leader in the upper house, wrote Hoff Saturday asking an immediate committee hearing on the riot. He also is here for the Kiwanis convention.

Rosellini was highly critical of Lt. Gov. Emmett Anderson's handling of the situation and said he thought Langlie "should have been here long ago to get to the roots of the trouble."

"The lieutenant - governor," he said, "has failed miserably in doing anything about this catastrophe. As acting governor he has shown no leadership in trying to pinpoint the reasons for the riot and for any possible future riots which may occur at Monroe or the State Penitentiary."

Hoff also said the penitentiary at Walla Walla should be investigated as soon as possible. He commented on recent rumors that the penitentiary is a possible spot for riots.

He said inmates, guards and administrative officials will be called to testify at the Monroe hearing and the committee will be aided by a member of the attorney-general's staff.

Costs estimates of the damage caused by the rioting, fire-setting inmates have ranged as high as two million dollars but Harold D. Van Eaton, state director of public institutions, said Tuesday it was $800,000 or less.

Van Eaton said a detailed survey indicated less damage than had been expected and that no major damage was done to the power house.

Two of the fire-damaged buildings are reparable, an Eaton said, but the cannery and tailor shop were destroyed.
