Will One Network Dominate TV Field?

By EVE STARR

HOLLYWOOD — TELETORIAL: Considering the fate of Collier's and Liberty in the fiction magazine field over the past few years, we wonder if it is not time someone raised the unhappy question of whether we are not one day to be left with one major television network in this country.

There was a time not long ago when these two magazines and the Saturday Evening Post were battling it out on the newsstands and the doorbells as worthy competitors for sales and subscriptions in the weekly field. Today only one survives, the Post, Collier's having gone semi-monthly, Liberty having folded.

Today three major television networks are fighting for the very same stakes, and because the content and appeal of all three is very similar to those of these three great magazines it is not inconceivable that one of them is going to have the field all to itself one day.

The floor of the Dutch Treat Club in New York is still covered with the limp forms of valiant men who tried too hard to figure out how the Post walloped Collier's and Liberty, but to us the answer seems fairly simple. It found out first what people wanted and kept giving it to them even though it was always expensive and frequently dull.

More important, the Post always had and still has the indefinable air of knowing exactly what it is doing while its competitors were fiddling and experimenting. The unvarying sameness of the thing week in and week out gave people confidence in it and in the end it turned the tide.

Consistency won the day for the Saturday Evening Post and it will win it for one of the TV networks sooner or later. It's too soon to predict which one. We'd pick NBC if decisions were not pending just now on two things that are going to affect the whole network picture.

One is an FCC ruling on toll TV. The other is how fast John Doe latches onto a color receiver.

After those two chips are down, we can't help feeling the day of one-network TV is coming.

STARR REPORT: Walt Disney is making no apology for the fact that his Disneyland won't be finished when shown to the public on a special 90-minute ABC telecast from the park itself on July 17, the day before it opens its turnstiles to paying customers.

"Disneyland," says Walt, "will never be finished."

The smell of new lumber hangs heavy over the 160-acre amusement center today and carpenter's scaffolding and concrete trucks scurrying here and there hide the view of the many attractions, but some 1200 workmen are working three shifts to make the July 17 deadline.

Enough of "Tomorrowland," "Fantasyland," "Frontierland" and "Adventureland" will be completed by that time to give an estimated 90,000,000 television viewers a preview and to provide the first visitors next day with a complete outing in the most ambitious undertaking of its kind.

We spent a few hours one day last week wandering around Disneyland, and can only say that to roam through its hundreds of attractions is like waking up and finding yourself in the same Walt Disney picture with Mickey Mouse and Sleeping Beauty.

STARRDUST: Dave Kaufman of Variety knows a writer who has submitted a new disease to "Medic" . . . Bob Crosby's gags about Bing are packing the Coconut Grove . . . TV network darkrooms are working overtime copying that picture of Terry Moore taken in Istanbul . . . Considering inflation, Leo G. Carroll of "Topper" says it's a good thing money doesn't grow on trees: "It would only cheapen the neighborhood" . . . Jan Merlin may go to Broadway in "The Woman with Red Hair," smash Los Angeles legitimate hit in which he appeared. It has a small cast—three.

Hal March will fly between New York and Hollywood each week, emceeing "$64,000 Question" over CBS in the east and doing "The Soldiers" over NBC from the coast . . . Jean Hagen flew to New York to plug "The Big Knife" on three TV shows.

Sportscaster Mel Allen tells the one about the Hindu fakir who bit his nails and now hasn't got a place to sleep . . . Mr. and Mrs. Jack Webb take a European vacation after his p.a. tour with "Pete Kelly's Blues." They return in November to Hollywood where Jack has 55 more TV "Dragnets" due NBC . . . Tony Martin will do straight drama in "Frontier Scout" at United Artists.

We know a disk jockey who thought the Unchained Melody was Davy Crockett . . . Fletcher Markle's missus, Mercedes McCambridge, will play the lady lead in "Tender Is the Night" which he produces and directs on "Front Row Center" . . . "The only thing my husband ever did on time," a woman told Bud Collyer on "Feather Your Nest," is buy a ring.

Rat Poison Hikes Speed

ATLANTA (AP) — When Patrolmen J. J. Cook and G. P. Hicks stopped a man for speeding, he excitedly displayed a half pint bottle marked "rat poison" and explained:

"I started to take a drink. I got the wrong bottle."

The officers forgot about the traffic ticket and helped speed the man on to a hospital where he soon was pronounced out of danger.
