Government Finding Reservoir Sites Easily.

SMALL PROJECTS COME FIRST

Oregon May Not Be the Scene of Initial Work Since the Most Desirable Locations Have Been Selected Under the Carey Act.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Sept. 8.—Chief Hydrographer Newell, of the Geological Survey, who is just back from a tour of inspection in the West, says that satisfactory progress has been made with the examination of possible reservoir sites that in all probability the work of construction on the first approved project, under the new law, can be commenced early next Spring.

In inaugurating this work, an attempt will be made to construct systems where the maximum number of settlers may be provided for on reclaimed lands at the minimum cost, and arising by quick construction, the funds arising from the disposal of water rights will be returned to the reclamation fund in the shortest possible time.

GEER'S SILENCE PUZZLES IT.

State Department Desires an Answer about Riot With Chinese in Oregon. OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Sept. 8.—(Special.)—The State Department is at a loss to account why Governor Geer has made no reply to its telegram of August 30, in which it laid before him the complaint of the Chinese Legation that the Oregon authorities had taken no steps to prosecute the men who attacked about 50 Chinese at Baker City, August 8. The complaint having come from the Washington representative of the Chinese Government makes it a state affair, entitled to every consideration.

ITS PERSONAL EQUATION. The Trusts Suffer Peculiarly From Human Limitations.

New York Journal of Commerce. Something over a year ago Mr. Charles M. Schwab, the president of the United States Steel Corporation, gave the people the benefit of what he believed might be expected from combination in the iron and steel industry. In the course of this statement Mr. Schwab enumerated certain defects which he believed would be remedied by the proposed combination. He regarded as fundamental among these were the following: The larger the output the smaller, relatively, is the cost of production. This is a better state of affairs whether the output consists of pins or of locomotives. Where the output is produced by fixed processes the rule applies with especial force. It is much more economical, proportionately, to run three machines under one roof than to run one. It is cheaper to run a dozen than it is to run three, and cheaper still if production is on a large scale.

There is apparently a danger point which Mr. Schwab overlooked. Since writing the article for the North American Review, Mr. Schwab has had one extended holiday and is about to start on another. If the first was purely for pleasure, with an incident of the special fitness possessed by the Old World what the president of the billion-dollar trust is like, the second is avowedly required for the repair of a system whose vigor has been somewhat impaired by overwork.

The Man Who Counts.

"The Brotherhood of Firemen does much for all firemen, but I firmly believe that the individual fireman, since the growth of the Brotherhood, has become more, not less, efficient than he was 20 years ago. Membership in the Brotherhood comes, as I understand it, after a nine months' probationary period; after a man has shown his worth, he is then admitted and stands on his footing as a brother. Now, any man who enters with the partnership of the Brotherhood, and who counts his own weight and a little more. Much can be done by the Brotherhood."

THE COUNTRY'S GREATEST NEED.

"So it is in citizenship. We need good laws, we need a good fundamental law of the type that we call the Constitution; but that is not all. If the men of the greatest of which nothing else can supply—the need for a higher average of individual citizenship. That we have got to have. It is just as it is in war. It was a matter of days before the troops were armed with such a weapon. I want to see each man have the best weapon, but if the man is also a poor creature, no matter how good the weapon is, he will be beaten by a good man with a club. I want the best type of weapon, but I want the man behind the gun. It is so in our civic life, in citizenship."

at this moment, but you need it, and I am glad that you have got it. (Applause.) "Yesterday I spent the time going over the great battle-fields of Chickamauga and Chattanooga, partly within the boundaries of your own state and partly within the boundaries of my mother's State of Georgia. Now, I come here along the upper waters of the Tennessee, to the seat of the first community settled by the people of our stock on the waters which flow into the Gulf of Mexico. It was six years before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War that the first little settlement out of which grew the State of Tennessee was founded, and it was here in this region that the mounted riflemen gathered under the leadership of Sevier—the shaft in memory of whom you see there—gathered to meet the requirements of which good citizens are made. He referred to the inscription on the monument raised by Kentucky to the Union and Confederate soldiers from that state who fell on that battlefield. He read the inscription, as follows:

"As we are united in life and lie united in death, let no monument perpetuate their deeds and their people, forgetting of all asperities, forever hold in grateful remembrance all soldiers of that terrible conflict, which made all men free and retained every star on the Nation's flag."

"That is a good sentiment, that is a sentiment by which we can all stand. And it is, my friends, a sentiment that has the underlying spirit of brotherhood. I firmly believe that the men of the greatest of which nothing else can supply—the need for a higher average of individual citizenship. That we have got to have. It is just as it is in war. When we went into the Spanish War a lot of our National Guards were armed with black-powder muskets—a weapon which makes the crossbow rather recent by comparison. I want the best type of weapon, but I want the man behind the gun. It is so in our civic life, in citizenship."

"I have just hinted in the general figures I gave you at how much has been done, but it still remains true in the Brotherhood and everywhere else throughout American life that nothing, in the last resort, can supply the place of the man's own individual qualities. We need those, no matter how perfect the organization is outside. There is just as much need now of nerve, hardihood, power to face risks, and accept responsibilities in the engineer and fireman, whether on a flyer or a freight train, as there ever was. Much can be done by the association. A great deal can be accomplished by working each for all, and all for each, but we must not forget that the first requisite in accomplishing this is that each man should work for others by working for himself, by developing his own capacity. Isn't this common sense? I think so. The steady way in which a man can rise is illustrated by a little thing that happened when I came down here over the Queen & Crescent Railroad, and the general manager who handled my train and who handled yours was Mr. Maguire. I used to know him in the old days when he was on his way up, and he began right at the bottom. He was a fireman at one time. He worked his way straight up, and now he is general manager, and he put this convention here, and he put me here. (Applause.)"

"I believe so emphatically in your organization because it teaches the best mode of working in union, of working in association, of working with deep purpose in our hearts, not merely on our lips—the sense of brotherhood—yet of necessity it will keep, as your organization must always keep, to the forefront the worth of the individual qualities of a man. (Applause.)"

"Now, I said to you that I came here in a sense not to speak to you, but to use your experience as an object-lesson for all of us—an object-lesson in good American citizenship. All professions, of course, do not call for the exercise of the same degree of quality of which I have spoken. Your profession is one of those I am inclined to believe plays in modern life a greater part, from the standpoint of character, than any other. There is no doubt in modern life, with the growth of civilization, with the growth of luxury, a certain tendency to softening of the National fiber. There is a certain tendency to forget, in consequence of their disease, the

GOOD MEDICAL DISCOVERY

Research of Students Belongs to Light Fatal Germ in Summer Complaint. NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The death of John D. Rockefeller's grandson, "Jack," two years ago, has enabled two students, one at Johns Hopkins and the other at the University of Pennsylvania Medical Schools, to discover what is believed to be the organism or germ of disease that carries off so many little ones every Summer. The organism was named "Summer complaint," says a Baltimore, Md., special to the World. When little Jack died two years ago Mr. Rockefeller is said to have offered a fund of $20,000 to be devoted to research. The outcome of this offer is the reported discovery of the fatal germ. In 42 cases the organism found is nearly identical with that which produces dysentery in adults.
