Probe of Senator's Office Brings Quick Protest From Solon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators investigating air power policies decided Thursday to apologize to Sen. Lehman (D-NY) because two Defense Department security agents checked his office yesterday for possible electronic snooping devices.

The Defense Department said it also would apologize.

Even so, Lehman sent word to newsmen he planned to take the Senate floor later to protest "methods used" in the unusual security check.

Mrs. Mildred Akins, one of the senator's office clerks, was startled yesterday when a Capitol policeman and two Defense Department agents asked to check room of the office containing files and a refrigerator.

In an adjoining room, Sen. Symington (D-Mo) has been conducting closed-door secret testimony by top military officials in the investigation of air power by a Senate Armed Services subcommittee.

Phone Protest

Lehman protested by telephone to Symington the invasion of his office privacy. Symington called in the security agents and the Capitol policeman for an unusual public hearing today.

Testimony developed that it is routine for Defense Department security agents to check congressional committee rooms and adjacent areas to make certain that no secret listening devices are in use.

Clark A. Morgan, one of the agents, explained that he discovered some insulation torn outside the committee hearing room yesterday, next to Lehman's office and a woman's toilet.

Request Refused

Morgan and Bernard Bogdonowicz, another agent, called a Capitol policeman, Gilbert J. Encinias, to help check the woman's room.

Encinias said he asked Mrs. Akins to see that no one was in the "ladies room" but she refused to leave Lehman's office.

Encinias said the agents then entered and discovered a passage leading to the Lehman office and returned to have Mrs. Akins "slam the door" on them.

After presenting credentials, all three said she let them check to see that no listening devices were there.

The Capitol policeman said Mrs. Akins regarded the check "as an insult" although I did not intend it that way.

Encinias quoted her as saying "someone tried to get in here and search the files two weeks ago."

Symington, after the sworn testimony, suggested that the subcommittee apologize to Lehman with an explanation that the defense agents "were merely doing their job."

Sens. Saltonstall (R-Mass) and Duff (R-Pa) quickly agreed.

Mansfield Sprague, general counsel for the Defense Department, said that agency would do the same thing.

Adm. Arthur Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, and his aides waited during the unusual testimony for a closed-door session at which they were to testify later.

"Of course every senator wants to protect our national security and military secrets and is anxious to cooperate," Lehman told a reporter. "But I'm going to protest in the Senate against the methods used."
