State Stock Inspection Laws Are Held Valid.

BY FEDERAL SUPREME COURT

National Livestock Association Loses Its Test Case, and Cattle Are Subject to Inspection at Every State Boundary.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The United States Supreme Court today sustained the constitutionality of the stock quarantine law of Colorado. The decision was based upon the case of E. H. Reed vs. the People of Colorado. The law prohibits the importation of cattle or other livestock into the state from points south of the 36th parallel of latitude between April and November unless they bear bills of health. The court held the law to be in accord with the right of the state to protect its own citizens.

In the course of his opinion, Justice Harlan said that the cattle in question were not infected by a contagious disease. Referring to the contention that the Colorado law is antagonistic to the National animal industry act, Justice Harlan said: "Our conclusion is that the statute of Colorado as here involved does not cover the mere ground as the act of Congress; and its Constitutionality is not to be questioned unless it is in violation of the Constitution of the United States independently of any other question."
