FRESH GARDEN PLATTER—Pats of butter enhance the flavor of the vegetables.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

It's Time for Garden Plate

By Gaynor Maddox
NEA Staff Writer

A lot of people like garden-fresh vegetable plates. And, of course, now is the ideal season for them.

For a well-arranged vegetable platter, color combinations, food flavors and textures are equally important. For example: mounds of emerald green peas, golden carrots, forest green beans, and beets separated by sweet tender ears of fresh corn. Nothing but pats of butter are needed to heighten and enhance the flavors of such foods. So combine this dairy food with garden food for a delicious and wholesome main dish.

To vary fresh vegetable flavors and give them a more sophisticated touch, try this delicious butter sauce.

Butter Sauce for Vegetables

One-third cup butter, 2 tablespoons minced parsley, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ½ teaspoon paprika, ½ teaspoon salt.

Mash butter to a soft cream and work in all other ingredients. Add to freshly cooked, hot green peas, string beans, broccoli, spinach, asparagus or slices of broiled eggplant. Note: Chopped fresh mint leaves, substituted for the parsley, are delicious when the sauce is served with green peas.

Flemish Carrots
(Serves 4-6)

Twelve small tender carrots, ½ cup boiling water, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon sugar, 3 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons minced parsley, 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Scrub carrots, trim and cut crosswise in very thin slices. If the carrots are young they do not have to be peeled or scraped. Cook in boiling water for 2 minutes. Add salt, butter and sugar, cover and cook 3 to 5 minutes longer. Springle in lemon juice and parsley and mix lightly with a fork. Be careful not to crush the carrots. Serve without draining.

News Service Offers Advice for Vacation When Taking Children

Taking the wife and kids on a vacation trip in the family auto, takes more than a road map, a good spare tire, and a bottle of citronella for insect-ridden nights.

According to the Childcraft Advisory Service in Chicago, it takes a stout heart and plenty of planning.

So, before you hit the open road, follow the advice of the C.A.S. and:

1. Fill a thermos bottle with cool, refreshing water. Provide each member of the family with paper cups marked with his (or her) name, to avoid hourly stops at roadside stands.

2. Put in a handy supply of crackers, popcorn, and chewing gum as an insurance against junior's continual hunger pangs and an occasional complaint of car sickness.

Provide Storage Space

3. Fasten a shoe bag to the inside of the car door, to provide a convenient storage space for the small cars, boats, airplanes and other toys the kids are always losing.

4. Make it clear to the small fry that a vacation isn't a toothbrushing and hand-washing holiday, but a period of normal relaxation and enjoyment for the entire family.

On the way:

1. Avoid meals of salad and other dubious concoctions, such as hamburger and custard pie, when dining at roadside stands.

2. Remember that pasteurized milk in a bottle or paper container is always a safer bet than even the freshest milk obtainable at the most picturesque farmhouse.

Distance Records Undesirable

3. Keep the daily mileage down so that your passengers won't become tired and irritable by dinner time. (After all, it's a vacation trip, not a cross-country handicap!)

4. Avoid fatiguing sight-seeing tours to monuments and museums. (Somehow, kids on a vacation just don't go in for too much culture.)

5. By-pass stopovers that afford only adult entertainment and no sandboxes for little sister or sandlots for junior. (Remember, there's nothing at an outdoor dance pavilion to captivate the heart of a four-year-old.)

Happy holiday!

GUESTS ATTEND SEWING SESSION

Baby Sitters Rate Families Served By Own System

Families with loaded ice-boxes, automobiles, and television sets are on the "preferred list" of America's baby sitters, according to the Advisory Service in Chicago.

Baby sitting is described by the Service as "probably the most independent part-time occupation in the country today."

In order to "rate" a regular baby sitter, parents of infants and small children have to abide by a series of regulations as rigid as the rules of protocol for an official dinner in Washington.

Minimum Food Requirements

Soft drinks and an apple are regarded as "absolute minimum food requirements for keeping the adolescent baby sitter happy." Candy bars, doughnuts, and chocolate cake are welcome additions and insurance against having the ice-box raided.

Families employing teen-age baby sitters must be willing to make concessions about use of the telephone, radio, television set, and recording machine and be reasonably prompt about returning at the agreed hour.

They must also escort the baby sitter home personally, if the hour is later than 10 p.m., or be willing to provide cab fare if necessary.

Dislike Extra Duties

High on the adolescent baby sitters' list of "squares" is the mama who is always trying to add dish-washing and ironing, or bathing and feeding the baby, to their duties, without offering additional compensation.

There are also a few things the baby sitter would like to know, i.e.: (1) Where can she reach someone in the family by telephone in case of an emergency, (2) Where light switches and entrances and exits are, for the same reason, and (3) Exactly what her duties are to be (outline in writing.)

Elderly ladies who act as baby sitters have to be treated with equal tact and understanding, or they will shortly transfer their loyalties elsewhere. But their interest in food and jive records is practically negligible when compared to their teen-age counterparts.

YOUNG VIOLINIST WINS SCHOLARSHIP

Competing against thirty-one musicians, all under the age of seventeen, who represented six Northeastern states, Michael Rabin, twelve-year-old violinist of 905 West End Avenue, New York City, has emerged winner of the tenth annual Edgar Stillman Kelley Junior Scholarship of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Winning the award means that Michael, who is the son of George Rabin, a violinist in the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, will receive $250 tuition annually from the Federation, or a total of $750 in three years, if his rate of progress warrants annual renewal of the scholarship.
