Breckenridge, Colo., Jan. 8.—B. D. (Bert) Acton, old-time prospector, hunter and trapper of Summit county caught a big wolf by the tail and killed it with a club.

Yep, he did, and what's more to the point he's got the skin of the animal to prove it.

Of course the wolf was at somewhat of a disadvantage when Acton grasped its tail, or even a man as rave and fearless as he is known to be, might have proceeded with greater caution.

A few days ago Acton set out one of his No. 2 steel traps for rabbits. When he visited the spot where he placed the trap the next morning, it was missing, the chain having been broken.

Acton decided that a neighbor's big dog had been caught in the trap and his heart ached for the animal in it's suffering.

The trail that the animal left showed that its right front foot was caught between the steel saw-teeth jaws of the trap. Acton followed the trail for some distance and then made a close examination of the footprints. Then he discovered the animal that was carrying the trap away was a wolf.

By this time Acton decided it was too far to return to his cabin for a gun, so he broke off a stout limb from a tree and again took the trail of the wolf. Acton followed the trail for six miles and finaly came upon the wolf on the banks of the Blue river, which was covered with ice except for a distance of four feet in the center of the stream.

The wolf started to cross the ice, and when it came to the open space, it tried to jump across. Handicapped by the trap, it missed the other side of the ice by a foot and fell into the water.

Acton grabbed the wolf by the tail and slowly dragged it back on the ice. Just as the animal turned to snap at him, Acton hit it a terrific blow on the head with his club, killing it instantly.

The wolf measured five feet and five inches from tip to tip.
