Writer Credits Explorer With Hero Qualities

"All the world's heroism has not been concentrated on the battlefield during the past few years," says Harper's Magazine some time ago. "While thew ar has engrossed the world's attention this explorer has dared and won important bloodless battles against sun, ice and darkness.

"For five years Valhjalmur Stefansson was extending the boundaries of the scientific world, his progress only guessed at by those who waited eagerly for news of him. His success marks a new era in arctic exploration. Like great military commanders he has solved the problem of supplies. Heretofore explorers have been limited in their trips by thet amount of food they could carry—depending upon eating their dogs on the return. Stefansson, traveling wtih a minimum of provisions, has lived off the land for months at a time and yet returned with men and dogs in good health."

The foregoing is typical of the lavish press tribute which appeared in almost every newspaper and magazine in the country—and in many other countries as well, following Mr. Stefansson's return to civilization. His thrilling story "My Five Years in the Arctic" is to be personally told by the noted explorer on the evening of November 19 at the Salem armory.

Mr. Stefansson's appearance in Salem is as a special number with the Ellison-White lyecum bureau.

Normal Notes

Monmouth, Nov. 10.—An electrical self winding clock has been installed in the office of the normal during the past week. It is planned that this clock will ring all bells and will regulate the secondary clocks in the training school the dormitory, the chapel and library.
