New York Stocks.

New York, Aug. 13.—Another of the succession of declines which marks Wall Street's recent history developed this week. There was no trace of the buying power and sustained strength which marked the upturn last month and the demand was so limited that the list responded quickly to pressure in almost any quarter.

Heaviness was most pronounced among the industrials, a number of which reached new low levels for the year. Standard railroads shares made a comparatively good showing, although some of the low priced rails were weak.

Operations were largely professional and were governed by the prevailing bearish sentiment. While recognizing that certain of the most formidable obstacles to recovery from depression had been removed, traders were disposed to ignore these considerations and place chief emphasis on unfavorable news such as the crop outlook indicated by the government report, further price reductions in commodities and the passing or cutting of dividends. There were evidence that speculators for the short account succeeded in forcing liquidation of real stock, and the absence of public support continued to assist them in their operations.
