Comprehensive Group Represented at Center

The opening exhibition of the new year at the Salem Art Center is a comprehensive collection of 21 paintings in water colors, oil and tempera by as many contemporary American artists. The pictures are representative of the work that is being done under the Easel Project division of the WPA Federal Art project in many sections of the United States. A number of the artists are well known in the museum world; others have won their first recognition through the opportunities afforded them by the project. Like the large number of other displays that have been sent out from the exhibition section in Washington, D. C., by Holger Cahill, national director, this collection gives the public an opportunity to study and to appraise the new horizons in American Art that are appearing under government sponsorship.

Although the majority of the pictures are landscapes, there is no monotony of treatment for the styles of the artists range from the realism shown in Yvonne Twining's "The Red Barn," where trees, farm implements and cattle are depicted with painstaking fidelity, to the delicately emotional winter 'Landscape," by Frances Strain with its tracery of bare branches accentuated by snow.

John McCrady, several of whose paintings have been reproduced in color in Life Magazine, is represented by a typical oil, "Returning Home." McCrady specializes in scenes from Louisiana to Mississippi.

The loneliness of life in the midst of a highly industrialized civilization is suggested in "Under the Bridge," a tempera by Louis Guglielmi of New York. Guglielmi was born in Italy in 1906, studied at the National Academy of Design, at the Beaux Arts Institute, and has exhibited at many museums, including the Architectural League and the Philadelphia Academy.

A class in show card writing and free hand lettering has been organized this term to give practical experience in this branch of commercial art. No tuition is charged and no previous training is necessary. Earl Bairey will conduct the class which will hold its first meeting at 7:30 Friday evening.
