Notice To Advertisers.

THE ASTORIAN guarantees to its advertisers the largest circulation of any newspaper published on the Columbia river.

This paper is on file at the St. Charles Hotel, Portland, Or.

The Willamette has 2,400 tons Seattle coal aboard.

Reserved seats for the Clara Louise Kellogg concert at the New York Novelty Store.

Jno. Robinson paid $500 for transportation of his circus from Portland to Seattle.

The City of Salem flour company has sued the Capital flouring mills company for $146,734.

There are now on the way to the Columbia vessels whose aggregate tonnage is 47,750 tons.

Tis said that Rocky Earhart has his eye on the governor's chair. But he'll never get his pants in it.

Note E. C. Holden's special auction sale at eleven o'clock this morning. Bargains may be secured. See adv't.

The Post-Intelligencer says that John Robinson's circus took in $15,000 in Seattle. It took out nearly all it took in.

East Portland has passed an ordinance prohibiting cows from running at large. East Portland evinces a desire to encourage immigration.

Ireland is making a good paper of the Yamhill Reporter. It is chuck full of news, is wholly printed at home, and has a prosperous look.

Norwegian Lutheran divine service will be held in the Swedish church, upper Astoria, to-morrow at 10:30 A. M., and 7:30 P. M; H. Engh, pastor.

Clara Louise Kellogg is said to have refused more offers of marriage than any other woman in America. She is still in maiden meditation fancy free.

Astor Lodge No. 6, and Pacific Lodge No. 17, K of P., elect delegates to the grand lodge on their next meeting nights. The grand lodge will convene at Salem October 13th.

After eight or ten more vessels pile up on Point Reyes the government will probably conclude to squander $2,000 or $3,000 in the establishment of a life saving station at that unfortunate point.

J. W. Walsh, the founder of the Chehalis Vidette, has struck it rich in southern Oregon, and has located a whole mountain of gold, with a little quartz in it, down near Ashland. There are cases on record where newspaper men got rich —when they went at some other business.

Seattle and Portland would be delighted to have Villard reinstated. Tacoma would be in mourning. Astoria wouldn't care. Astorians never lost their heads over Mr. Hilgard, and in the zenith of his fame treated him just as he did them. If he be reelected, all right; if not, no one here cares.

The News hears it rumored that the Oregon and California company, through an agent, is securing the right of way in Linn county side of the North Santiam, toward Minto pass. It would appear from this that the Oregon and California is about to connect itself with the Oregon Short Line.

A lady was walking along Main street very rapidly. A gentleman was walking just behind the lady at an equally rapid pace. The lady saw a pin on the sidewalk, and stopped suddenly to pick it up. The gentleman failed to put on the brakes and took a header over the lady. Neither party secured the pin.

It is reported in Portland that the great iron shaft running through the wheel of the Telephone is fractured, and that a new shaft has been ordered at an expense of $1,000 to replace the defective one. The Fleetwood will probably be substituted while the work of putting in the new shaft is in progress.

Over $300 worth of reserved seats for the Clara Louise Kellogg concert were sold in the first half hour after the opening of the box sheet at the New York Novelty store yesterday morning. The house will be worthy of the great singer and her troupe, and those who want a seat should secure one to-day.

It is understood says the News, that J. B. Montgomery has been offered $150,000 by a local firm for his dock in Albina which offer has been refused. Mr. Montgomery expects to clear $50,000 this year from his dock, and therefore has good reasons for not wishing to sell. The dock is probably the largest in the state, and is about 600 by 250.

The employment of the convicts in the state prison to manufacture stoves has demoralized the San Francisco market for those articles. There are 285 convicts in the prison of whom 160 are engaged in manufacturing stoves. They have already turned out 25,000 to 28,000, the quality and cheapness of which commend them to buyers all over the coast.

Rev. G. H. Atkinson, D. D., the superintendent of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, was in town this week looking after the interests of that denomination. While here he held an evening service at the house of Rev. Mr. Hamlin, and administered the rite of baptism to his two youngest children. He left yesterday to continue his pastoral journey among the churches of the coast.

It is said that are there three Chinese printing offices in San Francisco, fully equipped with type and presses, doing work for San Francisco business men, and employing white men. Of course, as soon as the Chinese become proficient with the art preservative, they will fire the white employes. "Rats" are bad enough, but Chinese printers are worse. The way to stop it is to allow no Chinaman in any capacity in a printing office on the coast.

The remark having been made in connection with the account of the wrecked Haddingtonshire that the gale which she encountered near the equator was unusual in that locality, the S. F. Chronicle notes, as proof to the contrary, about four years ago in the fall of the year, the British ships Kingsport and Cornwallis and American ship Hecla left there with wheat and in very near the position mentioned sustained such damage in a heavy gale that the first two were compelled to return here seriously damaged, the Cornwallis with seven feet of water in her hold. The Hecla arrived home but was damaged, and the ship Hagarstown arrived here from the east damaged in the same gale. The British bark Derock Water was in company with the ship just prior to the gale and has never been heard from since—lost with all hands. Several affairs of a similar nature, before and since, show that the locality is very dangerous to shipping and that gales are heavy there.

TIRED OF LIFE.

Jno. Surdwyk Commits Suicide With a Revolver.

At four o'clock yesterday afternoon Jno. Surdwyk, known around town as "old John" shot himself in the head with a revolver and died instantly. Deceased was for a long time porter at the Parker house and afterwards at the Occident. Of late he had been taking care of some cattle for Capt. Flavel at the old Williamson place. He was a single man, a native of Holland, aged about fifty years. The poor old man seemed to be totally tired of life, and had a complication of organic troubles that made life a burden to him. On his person were two pawn tickets, one for a watch, the other for a gold ring, a letter sealed and addressed to his sister living in Rotterdam, Holland, the other addressed to C. S. Wright of the Occident hotel. The letter was illegible. The suicide took place in the rear of the Old corner saloon. Coroner Ross was notified and held an inquest at seven o'clock last evening.

Dudley Bloant testified that Surdwyk had told him that afternoon that he was going to kill himself; didn't see him again till he heard he was in the back room and hastening there found that he had while in a sitting posture placed the muzzle of the revolver in his mouth and fired. It is thought that the ball ranged upward, penetrating the brain and occasioning instant death.

C. S. Wright testified that about one o'clock that afternoon deceased was writing at the desk in the Occident. Shortly after came up to witness and shook hands, saying "Good-by Mr. Wright." Witness asked him where he was going. He said "Never mind; you will never see me again." Witness thought nothing more of it till he heard of his death.

The jury brought in the following verdict: "We find that the name of the deceased was John Sedgeweet; that he was a native of Holland, fifty years of age, and that he came to his death Aug. 28th, 1885 from a gunshot wound inflicted by his own hand."

A Question For the Courts.

A question has come up regarding the new law as published in the session laws of 1885 on pages 136, 137 and 138. The act is from a bill introduced by Mr. Black of Linn, and known as house bill No. 5, for an act to further simplify proceedings in justices' courts, and to repeal chapter 14, and section 80 of chapter 9 of the justice's code. It seems the bill passed the house all right, but the records of the senate in the last day's proceedings shows the following to have been the vote on its final passage: Ayes 13, nays 11, absent 5, and excused, one. From this it will be seen that the bill failed to pass by three votes, there being thirty members in the senate, and the constitution of Oregon requiring a majority of all the members elected to either house to vote in the affirmative before the bill shall become a law. The bill, though, was handed by the clerk, through some mistake, to the enrolling and engrossing committee, was engrossed "as passed," and sent to the governor, who signed it. Now, the question is whether it is a law or not.

There's Millions in It.

How many acres of "swamp land" do you suppose is held by one man in this state? How many? Guess. Not many persons would guess a million acres. But they would have to multiply this by thirteen to get at nearly the amount. "Hen" Owens of Eugene City is now holding over thirteen millions of acres of "swamp land," and he has sold upwards of 600,000 acres, on which he has paid at least twenty per cent of the purchase price. On the other 13,000,000 acre farm he has paid not a cent, nor is the state or the government deriving a cent of revenue from this land. On one filing he "took up" 1,335,000 acres, which land extends, in townships, from six miles east of Lebanon, southeasterly, entirely through the state. These figures are commended to the joint investigation, and a refutation of their truthfulness challenged.

Not Crazy.

ED. ASTORIAN:

I would like, through your columns, to know if a man is crazy when he goes up on the hillside for a little pleasure in the afternoon, and should that man feel so disposed he sings a song, do you think he ought to be arrested and published in the papers as attempting to commit an indecent assault upon some girl or woman, is it very likely that a man would go in a public place if he was intent on any such object? And, as for being crazy, I think the woman who made the charge must be more crazy than I am.

Very respectfully,
FRANK CORREA.

Popular Science in a Water Test.

To test the purity of water there has been found no better or simpler way than to fill a half-pint flask one-eighth full of water to be tested; dissolve in the water four tablespoonfuls of the purest sugar (loaf or granulated will do) shake well, then squeeze in the juice of half a lemon and shake again. Then fill the remaining seven-eighths of the bottle with Old Crow or Mount Zion Bourbon, or sourmash will do very well; shake again, then insert a cork and slip the compound, bottle and all, in your pocket and go fishing. If you don't want to fish, drink off all but the water and throw the bottle at a mud turtle.—Salem Statesman.

COOKING CANNED SALMON.

The manner in which heat is applied in the preparation of food determines its texture, flavor and color. We cannot always furnish a reason why one process brings results different from another. We do know says the S. F. Journal of Commerce that various materials combined by the hand of two different persons produce varying results. There is a difference in the manipulation of the human hand which gives one housekeeper an advantage over the other and a difference which the most successful cannot explain. Every packer of canned goods has some peculiarity in his methods which he clings to with tenacity. We know of one who has an enviable reputation for putting up a certain vegetable to perfection. He processes twenty minutes, against the two to three hours of his competitors. Both are satisfied with results, although they differ.

Recently we opened four tins of favorite brands of 1885 salmon. One was cooked by the open kettle-process, the others by means of the retort. There was a marked difference in the texture, flavor and color of the different lots. That which was most pleasing to the eye was cooked in a retort, but when flavor was compared with the salmon cooked in the open-kettle it was nowhere. The latter was rich and palatable, while the former had a soft or slippery taste, the fiber breaking down readily under the pressure of the tongue, dissolving, as it were, in the same way as a piece of butter taffy. This was not characteristic of other of the tins examined that were cooked in retorts. One was tough and stringy; the other flat to the taste. In the salmon (retort process) most pleasing to the eye, the oil had been driven from the meat, while in that cooked by the open kettle there was only a trace of oil to be seen in the liquor surrounding the fish. Does the application of 225° heat in the retort act less regularly upon the larger number of cans treated than is the case where a less quantity is subjected to the open water bath? Does the extreme heat in the retort drive out the oil from the fish? If so, does it not account for the delicate and natural flavor peculiar to fish cooked by the open-kettle process? Retailers who have sold brands cooked by both methods claim that the palate of consumers tires more quickly of the rich, deep-red salmon, cooked in retorts, than when the paler, yet richer flavored salmon cooked in open kettle, is used. Color, however, is somewhat dependent upon the date at which the fish was captured and so is the texture. We also find a variation in the flakiness of canned salmon, some breaking up into sharp and angular pieces, while other lots lack definite outline, that cooked in open kettle showing the best.

Chemical analysis will readily determine whether fish cooked by the old method, or open-kettle process, is richer in oil than that cooked in retorts. It is then we must concede that the advantage of flavor rests with salmon cooked by the old method. These are questions that packers should investigate. They have sought, as one of them said, cheaper production at the expense of quality, and have not paid strict enough attention to the selection of the fish, in the physical condition of which there is great variation.

We also find that there is a delicacy and richness about canned salmon that has been packed for a year or more that is in marked contrast with the ranker flavor of newly packed fish. We are forced to the conclusion that canned salmon improves by age. This position is supported by the fact that the prize medal at the Berlin fisheries exposition was awarded on tests made on the same lots of canned salmon that received the medal five years before at the Centennial exposition in Philadelphia.

We found also a difference of from two to three ounces in the weight of cans recently tested. This ought not to be.

Retailers are right in discriminating as regards brands. It costs more to pack salmon where the packer conscientiously selects the fish and exercises care that the weight and condition of contents should be uniform than where the case is otherwise.

MISS KELLOGG'S PURCHASE.

Clara Louise Kellogg is a lady of much more than ordinary brilliancy in conversation, and has a general information with reference to the country, its people, topography, natural resources and curiosities which would reflect credit upon a scientist or historian. Like all women of this class, whose broad intellect is ever reaching out for new developments and a higher intelligence, Miss Kellogg has a passionate fondness for the curious, and yesterday morning hearing that Indian curiosities could be secured in Bismarck, she called a newsboy from the platform and told him to bring her the finest specimens of handiwork he could find. The boy hastened away and soon returned with several pretty articles, among them being a handsomely beaded riding whip, which the sweet-voiced singer purchased for $1.50. The news of the boy's success in making a profitable sale to the famous lady soon spread among his associates, and while she was admiring her fancy whip in the corridor of the hotel, a pug-nosed, loud-voiced bootblack rushed up to where she stood, and cried, in a voice that attracted the attention of the gentlemen in the office:

"Say, mum, is you Misses Clar'l Weze Klung?"

"Yes, my little man, what can I do for you?" kindly asked the pleased lady, and all the gentlemen gathered around to hear the conversation.

"Wall I jes want to know if ye'll buy some Injun krosities uv me. That other feller swindled yer when he made yer pay a dollar'n half for that ol' whip."

"Well, what have you got for me?" Miss Kellogg asked.

Everybody was anxiously awaiting the response of the boy, when he broke the silence by exclaiming:

"I can get you a nice big pair o' leggins, that'll jes about fit you, for less'n a dollar'n half, an' they're——"

"Oh, pshaw!" interrupted Miss Kellogg, as the crowd dispersed with muffled laughter, "I've got all the leggins I want."

"But these'uns are all beaded up the sides," yelled the bootblack, in a desperate effort to hold the customer; "an' they'll never wear out, either; an' they'll reach."

But Miss Kellogg had disappeared, and the bewildered bootblack wondered how his associate could ever make a deal with such a strange customer.—Bismarck, D. T., Tribune.

SANGUINE AS TO THE RESULT.

Wm. McCormick, of this city, whose recent invention designed to successfully navigate the Cascades, is attracting deserved attention, writes to E. A. Seeley, agent Columbia Transportation company, as follows:

CASCADE LOCKS, Aug. 25.

Mr. E. A. Seeley: Dear Sir—I presume you did not get my letter of last Friday, as I have received no answer, stating that I ran a working model of my proposed tug boat for towing steamers and barges through the Cascade rapids, through the Garrison and Big Eddy rapids, also in the ordinary current between the two. It worked even better than I expected, so that I am satisfied that I have not made a single false proposition in all my plans as shown in my drawings and specifications, and which are as follows:

First—That the Columbia river from The Dalles down can be made as free in six months from now as the locks under the most favorable circumstances will have it in ten years from the present time.

Second—That boats can be handled with as much safety and with more speed than the locks will pass them.

Third—That the scheme can be put in working order for $75,000, and that a reasonable further outlay, that can be made from time to time, as needed, for wharves and moorings for boats, will enable it to pass forty boats up and forty boats down every twenty-four hours.

Now I have the proof to these propositions right here on the ground, and it looks to me as though it would be easy to get a crowd to come and see them. I would charter the steamer myself but I am unable, therefore I have to ask you to see if you can do anything toward the matter.

I would run through the main rapids but I think my line is not strong enough. Besides it would be the same as asking my little boat to go to China when a big ship is required instead. But I can give a satisfactory exhibition on the Big Eddy rapids. WM. MCCORMICK.

WHAT THE PANAMA CANAL MAY DO.

Dr. Charles Pinckney, a man of fine learning and observation, opens up a stupendous suggestion. He asked the other day: "Have you thought much of the physical effect of the Panama canal?"

"Not much."

"Well, let me throw out a suggestion. The Pacific ocean is five times as large as he Atlantic. The rotary motion of the earth, acting on water near the equatorial line, of course has a tendency to pile it up. The bulk of the Pacific being so much larger than the Atlantic, is lifted 28 feet higher than the Atlantic. For the same reason, that of its bulk, it is about 20 degrees colder. Now imagine the effect of this enormous body of water, 28 feet higher in level and 20 degrees colder in temperature, being poured into the Atlantic through the canal."

"Why doesn't it seek its level below the cape?"

Because that point of meeting is so far from the equatorial line that the centrifugal force is not so great, and the levels of the two oceans are the same. Up about the Panama the difference in levels is great, and the immense volume of the Pacific will rush down into the Atlantic with terrific force."

"And with what effect?"

"That is almost beyond speculation. But suppose this mingling of the two oceans simply changed the current of the Gulf stream. That one change would wipe out the cotton and rice industry, making Georgia many degrees colder. These are speculations; but the facts are as stated, and it is interesting to think of what will be the effect when this canal is cut, and the high immensity of the Pacific is dropped to the level of the Atlantic."—Atlanta Constitution.

He Tumbled to the Idea.

It has been estimated that out of a total strength of some 2,500 men in the National Guard of California, 1,874 of them are majors. To-day, while General Carey was standing in front of his tent, a portly-looking gentleman, dressed in civilian's clothes, approached him, doffed his hat, and stated that he at one time had the pleasure of being acquainted with the General. "My dear sir," said the General, "I regret very much to say that I cannot remember you." "Very likely," said our friend. "I'm Major Breeches." "Major Breeches—Major Breeches," murmured the General; "I don't remember you. What brigade do you belong to?" "None, sir," replied the visitor, "I don't belong to any brigade, you know. I made your breeches." The General then tumbled to the idea, paid the bill, and the man suddenly taking his leave, there was one "major" less in the camp.—Camp Stoneman Letter.

Homœopathic Pies.

A year or more ago an auctioneer in a certain city had for sale a lot of homœopathic medicines. All these medicines were dumped into a pile and disposed of in one lot, there being various kinds of medicines in the mass. A boarding house keeper bought the lot, and some days after the purchase the auctioneer asked her. "What did you do with that homœopathic medicine. Mrs.——?" She replied: "I thought I could use it, and it was cheap, and so I crushed it under the roller and then filled my sugar bowls with it. The boarders seemed to like it, and especially when powdered over pies.
