The Astorian guarantees to its advertisers the largest circulation of any newspaper published on the Columbia river.

Advertising rates can be obtained on application to the business manager.

This paper is in possession of all the telegraph franchises and is the only paper in the lower Columbia that publishes telegraphic dispatches.

The Daily Astorian is issued every evening, Sundays excepted, and is the only evening paper in the city. The Weekly Astorian, the third largest weekly in Oregon, is issued every Tuesday morning, and is the largest and best family weekly in the state.

Subscribers who may fail to receive their paper regularly will confer a favor by reporting the fact at the office of publication. Complaints will be promptly investigated if notice of irregularity is given immediately after the loss of time. If papers are not delivered at the usual hour, by doing this they will enable the management to locate the blame or remedy the delay.

Handley & Hass are our Portland agents and copies of The Astorian can be had every morning at their stand on First street.

HE HAS TURNED UP.

Sometimes we have regretted exceedingly, when we sit down and ponder over current history, that we have not seen or heard anything any more of Mr. Dickinson—Don Dickinson, of Michigan. The chilling thought has occasionally come to us that in this tremendous world we were losing the inexplicable and invaluable services because he had no more for the second term of Grover Cleveland. But that gentleman has heard the great ruler, Mr. Cleveland, lays down in effect or personal affairs, that he will not allow any American citizen to sacrifice himself. It was said that, when it was beautifully expressed to Mr. Cleveland that ex-Mayor Grace might be willing to serve the country, and his sacrificial services were mentioned, the president-elect abruptly announced that he had "that tired feeling" in an aggravated form. The communication of Mr. Grace on the floor of the Waldorf while traveling in Chicago to confer with President-elect Cleveland, and his subsequent appointment, and his promptness in remaining in the country, and his promptness in remaining in the country, and his promptness in remaining in the country
