DEMOCRATIC DILEMMA.

The president and his advisers seem to realize that they are standing between the devil and the deep sea. A few weeks hence the Fifty-third Congress will complete its regular session, and unless an extra session is called, there will be no further opportunity for the unsuccessful tariff tinkerers to tinker with the currency. This situation was fully described in Washington dispatches, recently published, where Senator Hill is referred to as taking the ground that "there is yet time to relieve the treasury from its present embarrassment if the representatives of the people will discard all attempts to ply politics in dealing with the financial problem." It is very unusual for Senator Hill to do anything except from strictly political motives, and his advocacy of non-partisanship simply means that he and his Democratic associates are hopelessly muddled up on the currency question, and want Republicans to assist them in putting through a measure which will save Mr. Carlisle from further loss of reputation as a financier.

Referring again to Mr. Hill's statements, it is interesting to note that he regards the relief to the treasury from its present embarrassment as "not a question of adopting the president's plan, or Secretary Carlisle's plan, or the plan of any particular individual, as it is apparent to every one that the present law does not afford sufficient revenues to meet the expenses of the government, and that the deficit would have been still greater had the Wilson bill been adopted in its original form."

Here is a confession which the American people, in the words of Captain Cuttle, should "take a note of." The revenues from the present tariff bill are found wholly inadequate, and the financial situation, into which the original Wilson bill had been adopted, can easily be imagined. Now the Democrats, having brought the present situation into existence, are casting about for some means of getting rid of the demand notes of the government, which bid fair to take the gold out of the treasury almost as fast as Mr. Carlisle can put it in. But there is little encouragement to hope that the Democrats will succeed in extricating themselves from their muddle.

A dispatch from Swansea states that 3,000 tin-plate workers from Swansea have been discharged owing to a great decrease in the demand for plates from this country. Some of the falling off is due to dull times following Democratic tariff experiments, but the larger part is attributable to the domestic manufacture of tin plates. This new branch of industry was started under Republican auspices, and has continued, notwithstanding Democratic threats of annihilation. The United States is by far the largest consumer of tin plates in the world, and there is no reason why they should not be made in this country, affording employment to many thousands of people.

Senator Gorman's speech in the senate on Monday shows how some of the leading Democrats are coming to their senses. It is doubtful, as Mr. Reed many times said during the campaign, if even he could have said any harder things about the Democrats than they have been saying about themselves ever since the last session of congress. Said the senator, in one place: "The tariff "bill which first came to the senate had "brought forth an era of demagoguery "such as the country has never seen. "It overlooked the greatest essential of "legislation—to realize sufficient revenues to carry on the government." And in another place he made the following astounding statement: "We are raising more taxes from our people than "from customs duties. Not enough "revenue is being raised from customs "to pay the pensions. The bulk of taxation is now being levied within our "own borders. The customs revenue "will be many millions short of the "$140,000,000 required for pensions. Can "we reduce the expenditures? I answer "no. In 1892 the pension budget reached "$180,000,000, its highest point. It is now "down to $140,000,000, and will diminish "as the old soldiers die. It will average "$125,000,000 for the next ten years. The "expenditures for postal service, the "navy, rivers and harbors, must go on."

On the first of next March there come into operation the new regulations for mariners and rules of the road at sea, devised by the International Marine Conference which met at Washington in 1889. The object of fixing March, 1895, as the date of thir universal adoption, was to give ship owners and mariners all over the world ample notice, and it is worthy of note that notwithstanding the time that has elapsed since the conference and the diversity of the interests of the various nations concerned, no substantial objections to the adoption of the rules have been received from any source.

"We are now raising more taxes from our people than from customs duties," and "the bulk of taxation is now being levied within our own borders," says Maryland's senior senator, in the senate debate on Monday. What does he mean? Why merely, it must be assumed, that the Democratic party has at last been converted to the view that Republicans have for so many years been endeavoring to inculcate, that it is the foreigner who pays the duty on goods imported into this country.
