FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1901.

The weather is so like spring time that everybody is preparing for early gardening.

The present senatorial contest this week reminds one of a Fourth of July old men's race.

The cold snap seems to be at an end and Webfooters will welcome the return of the celebrated Oregon mist.

It is quite probable that the S. P. operators will be as glad to welcome settled weather as anyone. The expense of keeping the track clear south of Roseburg in the winter months is enormous.

Let there be light, henceforth and forever. Good lights are preferred, but most any old light will do in preference to the midnight of dispair which has held sway in this town the last three months.

The bill introduced in the house by Representative Story, asking that a mine inspector be created by the legislature will undoubtedly meet with the approval of the majority of the miners in the state.

The Oregon Native Sons is a splendid magazine, improving with each issue. It is a worthy book, printed in the interest of a worthy cause and deserves the liberal patronage of every Oregon born man and woman.

No small amount of complaint comes from business men of this city and farmers alike, regarding the deplorable condition of the road between Cottage Grove and Saginaw, especially the strip from this city to the railroad crossing. It is conservatively estimated that $5,000 worth of trade has been lost by the business men of this city, owing to the impassable condition of this piece of road. It is a county road and the county authorities should look into the matter and repair it at least so that it is passable without delay.

For some weeks the tramps have been moving in quite large numbers. Some of them are well dressed, and along with their free and easy occupation and good clothes carry a considerable amount of gall, to the extent that they frequently intimidate women who they find alone at the house. It has been said that the promiscuous reappearance of these wandering Willies is due to the closing down of gambling in some of the larger cities, setting many of the class known to have no visible means of support adrift. In part this may be true and the assertion is well substantiated in that few of the "floats" ask for work, prefering to beg at kitchen doors for something to eat, turning their back upon the wood pile. It is hard for many people to turn a man away from the door when he says he is hungry, but each home owner, should appoint himself a committee of one to see that every one who gets a meal at his house should pay for it in work. A good meal is worth 20 cents, and no honest man would refuse to work for it. The giver of the meal should see that he who ever shall ask for a meal shall work for it, and give good honest work, too. If a meal is worth 20 cents, a deserving man should not object to working an hour for it. That would be at the rate of $2.00 per day. Let the able bodied tramp earn his meals and refuse those who do not care to work the privilige to eat. In this manner, we can feel reasonably sure that those we feed are deserving, and at the same time we discouraged the lazy beggar, who, if able bodied is beneath the notice of the industrious home maker.

Meny of the senatorial aspirants are in hard luck. They ain't old enough.

Commencing with next Sunday the new barber law will go into effect. It prohibits the opening of barber shops and the transaction of barber business on Sunday. It is generally understood that the law meets the approval of the fraternity, providing, of course, it is enforced. This will be doubtful, however. Many contend that the law is unconstitutional, and will be disregarded. Of course there will be a test case made, and then the supreme court will pass judgment as to the constitutionality of the enactment. In the mean time the barbers will have a chance to let their "tired" razors rest and get out on Sunday and talk each others arms off, thereby giving their many customers a rest also. In the interval requiescat in pasge.
