Messrs. Scott & Riggs have completed their painting contract on J. S. Cooper's new brick block. These gentlemen have done a very artistic piece of work. Some of their wood graining is as fine as we ever saw, exhibiting the natural graining of the wood to perfection. These gentlemen are painstaking workmen and give good satisfaction. The Cooper block is a fine improvement to the business portion of the city and adds very materially to the appearance of C and Main streets.

McMinnville has great cause for rejoicing. She is soon to have a brass band with "iron-clad rules and by-laws for the government of the band," says the Transcript. We are glad to learn that our sister city is to be rejuvenated into life again, for our excellent contemporary assures us that "a town without a brass band is a dead duck." Ahem! "A town without a brass band is a dead duck." McMinnville is without a brass band. Ergo: McMinnville is a "dead duck." Well, we always knew there was something wrong down there, but this is the first time we ever heard the complaint authoritatively diagnosed and labelled.
