

WATER IS WASTED

Flow of Artesian Wells Should Be Regulated.

ALL SHAFTS SHOULD BE CASED

Professor Russell, of the Geological Survey, Examining Formations in Central Oregon With Reference to Artesian Conditions.

BEND, Or., Aug. 27.—(Special.)—"People of Oregon should learn how to make and use artesian wells," says Professor Israel C. Russell, of the United States Geological Survey, who is now making an examination of Central Oregon with special reference to artesian conditions.

"They should be taught that it is practically useless to sink artesian wells without casing the shaft, and that having the well once properly cased, it is a rank waste of a valuable natural resource to leave it to spout away its wealth without limit or control. The State of Oregon ought to provide by law against the wanton waste of artesian water. Why should not that be regulated by law as well as the use of surface streams? The necessity is quite as great.

"The few artesian wells of Eastern Oregon are not cased, therefore the flow passes off through seams and fissures in the rock strata through a vital resource, shaft passes. Sometimes they flow for a time and then have to be pumped, as the leakage along the shaft takes more of the water. People who do not understand the matter declare these wells a blank fraud, in their expressive way, when the trouble comes from their own ignorance of artesian conditions.

"When was the latest lava flow in this section?" was asked of Professor Russell. "We cannot tell," said he. "The lava flows very fresh and in many places it seems as if it had just cooled off. But we have nothing by which we can determine its age, except that it is pretty certain there has been no eruption here within the past 70 years."

"Glacier on the Three Sisters. The party went up into the Haystack country. All along the way the rocks were examined, chiefly basalt, rhyolite and tuff, but no discoveries of significance were made. Turning southward the expedition took its way up the Deschutes, making a detour to ascend the most northerly of the Three Sisters. A glacier glacier on the Three Sisters.

"The first thing done was to ascend Pilot Butte, an elevation a mile and a half east of Bend that reaches about 90 feet above the adjacent plain, and from that point Professor Russell counted 28 similar buttes, each of which at no very remote period had been an active volcano. He has no doubt that the volcanic character of this region is volcanic and recent. The soil, the Professor says, does not come from decomposition or erosion of the rock; our rocks are too new to have become worn. Their covering is of dust and sand blown over them by the wind. He says that is a productive soil when moisture is added and it is properly tilled.

"In the two days he was here Professor Russell was seeking to establish the relative ages of the tuff that is so abundant in this vicinity and the latest flow of lava. Klamath Will Be Visited. The party will make an examination of the Klamath country, will visit Crater Lake and cross the range to Roseburg. It will reach that point about September 20. The outfit will be stored there for use next year, and the men will leave at once for the university, which will open on the 28th. It will be several months before Professor Russell's report of this reconnaissance will be published.

"Professor Russell calls attention to the fact that but one state in this country has enacted laws restricting the use of artesian water on the waste of surface water, the State of Washington. And the law of that state he regards as unsatisfactory. The principal restrictions and conditions he would establish and enforce by law are as follows: Well Regulations Suggested. 1. Every drill hole in an artesian basin should be properly cased. 2. Every artesian well not in use should be securely closed. 3. Every abandoned drill hole in an artesian basin should be completely filled with impervious material. 4. Artesian water can be depended on only for domestic uses, for watering stock and irrigating gardens. Reservoirs and canals must be relied upon for reclaiming considerable areas of arid land. But an artesian well on a plain miles from any point where surface water is available will make large areas valuable that are now mere deserts. The development of artesian water belongs to the artesian scheme. All of this is highly important in the industrial economy of Eastern Oregon.

WOMAN GOES FREE

Witnesses Against Mrs. Haynie Do Not Appear.

Woman Acknowledges Holding the Horse While Seattle Man Was Held Up, but Disclaims Knowledge of What Was Transpiring.

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 27.—(Special.)—Grace Walton Haynie, the young wife of Highwayman H. W. Haynie, who used a horse and buggy to assist him in getting away after his robberies, was today released from the city jail. The witnesses whom the police expected to identify the woman as the one they saw sitting in the buggy holding the horse while Haynie held up his victims were unable to do so, as she was too far away from them to see their features.

Just before her release Mrs. Haynie was taken to the room of Chief of Police Sullivan, where she had a talk with Detectives Tennant and Barber, who arrested the couple. To the detectives she admitted she was with her husband on the night he held up Oscar Gans, and held the horse. However, she said she was not aware of what he was doing. She supposed they were out for a drive and had lost their way. She believed her husband was out looking for the road when he was playing the part of a highwayman.

This statement, together with the fact that the evidence given by Haynie against his wife could not be used against her, caused the authorities to drop the matter, and Mrs. Haynie was led from her cell a free woman. She made a statement later that the reasons she denied being with her husband at any time since she was in the city was that she did not know just how his case stood, and did not want to do him any harm.

The authorities are convinced that what the woman did for the love she bore her husband, and that he was the one who led her into a share in the crime.

After leaving the station, Mrs. Haynie returned to her room in the Biags House, on First avenue, and, after fixing her toilet, returned to the station to see her husband. However, this privilege was denied her. In the morning she was allowed a half-hour conversation with him, and that is the last she will have for some time.

Mrs. Haynie will remain here for a time and then will probably go to her mother-in-law in Portland. The case came to the attention of the Superior Court, and hopes to get off with the minimum sentence of five years.

Mrs. Haynie's Mother Arrives. SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 27.—Detective Joe Day, for 20 years a member of the Portland police; Captain Sam Simmons, of the same department, and Mrs. Walton Haynie, whose husband has confessed to holding up men in the streets of Seattle, arrived in the city last night. Mrs. Walton comes to look after her daughter and to take her home with her, if she will go. The officers are here to look into the Haynie affair.

Haynie is well known in Portland and his father is a respected resident of Forest Grove. So far as they are aware of, Haynie has done no holdup work in Portland. It is said he has been suspected of other crimes, but no evidence was ever forthcoming to convict him, to her mother's wife well known in Portland, the officers say, where she has many friends. Her record has always been clear, and they believe, with the local officers, that she has been misled by her husband.

REV. J. W. FLEISHER CLAIMS EXPENSES WHILE ATTORNEY.

Defended Rev. C. D. Nickelsen Before a Methodist Church Court—Defendant Files Counter Suit.

COLFAX, Wash., Aug. 27.—(Special.)—Rev. John W. Fleisher, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pullman, who was assistant counsel for Rev. C. D. Nickelsen, formerly pastor of the Colfax church at his trial for conduct unbecoming a minister, has sued Nickelsen for $15,000, alleged to be due for expenses while Fleisher was acting as Nickelsen's attorney. The case attracted much attention last winter, when Mr. Nickelsen was tried at Spokane on the charge of conduct unbecoming a minister and found guilty of the same charge as forbidden by Swanson's declaration that he was the best-pastored man in the Columbia River Conference on ecclesiastical law, and the repeated assurance that he would make no charge for his services. It is alleged that all his litigation expenses were paid, and that "the said John W. Fleisher has brought this action simply for the purpose of blackmailing the said C. D. Nickelsen."

NO TEAM IN PORTLAND. Pacific National League Will End Season With Four Clubs. BUTTE, Mont., Aug. 27.—The magnates of what is left of the Pacific National League held a conference this evening, which was continued long in the night.
