DAILY MARKET REPORT

Oregon Journal Market Review
PORTLAND, Ore., March 10.—Cut of 3c pound in the price of print butter, announced late Tuesday by local creameries, became generally effective at the Wednesday opening.

For some time past there has been more or less disinclination on the part of local creameries to follow the easier feeling in the trade by quoting a lower price for butter, which meant a similar cut in the price of butterfat. Despite the unwillingness of dairy interests to believe that the creamery interests are seeking to pay an extreme price for fat, the fact remains that on many occasions the price decline has been delayed on this account. The present instance is but one of many.

Best print butter is now 48c pound in parchment wrappers, with the usual premium of 1c for cartons.

Increasing make of butter has been shown throughout the local territory for some time past.

Egg Market Shows a Decline
Losses were generally shown for eggs on the dairy exchange for the last session, firsts alone showing no change. Big eggs and small eggs are quoted at the same price now. It is impossible to sell supplies on that basis on the local market.

Chicken Prices at a Record
New high record has been reached for lightweight hens on the local market. Along the wholesale way light stock was advanced to 23@24c pound with heavy stock at 26@27c. There is a famine of the various classes. Turkey demand is good.

Plenty of Crabs Are Coming
There is a good supply of fresh crabs, reports J. J. Cotter of the Oregon Fish company. Fresh halibut is in supply at 20@22c pound, while Columbia river smelt offerings continue liberal at $1.00@$1.25 box. Columbia river chinook steady.

Potato Trading Is Limited
Very limited trading continues in the market for potatoes. Carload business continues confined to limited orders from the South and Southwest. Local jobbing market is very slow with prices draggy.

Brief Notes Wholesale Trade
Extreme scarcity of hothouse rhubarb; sales up to $1.50 box.

Walla Walla spinach moving fairly well up to $2.25 crate.

Mexican bell peppers continue scarce at 30c pound.

Honey market fairly steady for comb stock; most sales fancy, $3.75.

Southern California strawberries $5.50 crate of 12 baskets.

Orange market firmer; some advanced 25c box.

Onion market remains inactive, both here and at primary points.

Broccoli Prices Are Lower
With increasing stocks of home-grown broccoli, local market is weaker with best Roseburg at $1.40 and small stuff as low as $1 crate. Local fancy is selling at $1.75@$2.00 per dozen with most at the lower price.
