At Louisville, Ky., March 30, an opinion handed down by Judge Shackelford Miller denies relief to Henry Hertle, who petitioned for the removal of a dog that is buried in Cave Hill cemetery. The suit was directed against Alice Riddle, who buried "Billy Kensbrough," a pet fox terrier, in her lot in Cave Hill. The plaintiff sought to have the body removed, alleging that it was a nuisance and that he disliked the idea of some day being buried near the canine tenant of the graveyard.

A Washington, D. C., dispatch of April 15, says: According to the weather bureau, a distant earthquake of great intensity was recorded at 1:14:20 this morning. The greatest movement of the earth at Washington was secured in an east-and-west direction, and lasted from 1:26 to 1:41, while the principal portion of the north-south movement lasted until 1:31 a. m. The duration of the earthquake was more than two hours. These records seem to indicate an unusually violent earthquake at a distance comparable in intensity with those which recently occurred at Valparaiso and Kingston.

The City of Mexico was visited by a severe earthquake shock about midnight, April 14th, putting out the electric lights, knocking down a few walls and splitting a street in one or two places. No fire ensued, and the damage was not great. Reports from Oaxaca and San Juan Bautista say conditions are about the same as at Mexico City. Vera Cruz was severely rocked. It was the heaviest earthquake in twenty-five years.

A story of Harry Thaw's dread of witnessing the death of a dog has just been made public in Paris. During a visit to that city, Thaw, who is a great lover of dogs, presented to the Gennevillers home for lost dogs its first apparatus for the painless extinction of hopelessly diseased or injured animals. The authorities invited him to see the apparatus in use. Just as the manager was about to lead a dog into the "death chamber," Thaw turned pale and stopped. "I would rather not see it," he said, and excusing himself hurriedly left the building.
