48-Hour Week Starts March 31

While President Franklin D. Roosevelt's 48-hour week program ordered to go into effect March 31 in 32 critical labor areas of the United States, ostensibly affects only three Oregon counties designated as lying within the Greater-Portland metropolitan area, it also includes logging and non-ferrous metal mining throughout the state, according to an announcement just released by L. C. Stoll, area director of the war manpower commission.

Lauding the voluntary cooperation of both management and labor throughout the state in all similar cooperative ventures, particularly the stabilization measures adopted last fall for the logging and non ferrous metal mining industries, Director Stoll said that he hoped and believed that the same whole-hearted reception will greet the new wartime measure.

"Taken as part of the fullest mobilization of American resources as a prelude to 1943 plans calling for a tremendous invasion of Hitler's European fortress, the 48-hour week executive order applies not only to the Portland metropolitan area in Oregon, but also every county in which non-ferrous metal mining and logging industries operate," Stoll said. That, of cource, includes Coos county.
